The justice of PRICE COLLIER'S views, and the wit and vigor with which he expresses them in "England and the English" and "The West in the East," have given him an international reputation as a commentator upon the life and customs of a country.

"Germany and the Germans" follows the lines of "England and the English," and the observations of its writer are certainly no less candid, just, and pointed. It is a book that will undoubtedly cause a stir, not only because it makes vivid to us a nation that is rapidly becoming more and more important to the world, and yet is comparatively unfamiliar, but because the writer is so outspoken in his criticism and so convincingly revealing in his analysis of conditions, social, educational, military, and political.

WABASH

JUST as James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, has pictured in his verses, with such delightful realism, the quaint and picturesque village life in Indiana, so has Anna Nicholas visualized, in the fourteen stories included under this title, the Hoosier hamlet life which she knows and loves so well.

With unfaltering realism, a simplicity of manner and a dry humor that is all the more pleasing for its unexpectedness, she unfolds her stories, letting the humble lives with which they deal speak for themselves.

With masterly skill Miss Dell has depicted the domination of love and its effacing strength when called upon to blot out from the memory an offense which only love could forgive. The struggle of the hero, a savage at heart, to emancipate himself from the sinister tendencies of his nature and to rise to the standard which the woman he loves is entitled to claim, is told in a story full of romance and adventure.

"UPTOWN IN NEW YORK"—REMOVAL OF PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY.

THE uptown trend of publishing in New York, which has brought the vanguard of the publishing trade as far north as Fifth Avenue and 54th Street, where E. P. Dutton & Co. are now established, and has just brought the Scribner house to its new home at Fifth Avenue and 48th Street, is perhaps emphasized by the removal of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY from the offices which it has occupied for thirteen years, since March 17, 1900, at 298 Broadway, to the neighborhood of Madison Square, its new offices at 141 East 25th Street being two blocks east from that center. It is interesting to note that when, in the earliest days of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, forty years ago, Frederick Leypoldt was conducting this journal from its first offices at 712 Broadway, the Dutton house was then at 713 Broadway, and the Scribner house at 654 Broadway, that neighborhood then constituting the center of the publishing trade in New York. The uptown trend began not many years after, but the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY removed downtown, in the neighborhood of the Post Office to its offices first at 31 Park Row and then at 13-15 Park Row, whence it journeyed successively to Franklin Square and to the Duane Street neighborhood. The Harper house, anchored by the original brothers in what was the most remarkable building of its day in Franklin Square, has ever since remained the downtown outpost of the trade; and no rumors of its removal have yet been heard. A few other of the older houses still remain in the downtown neighborhood, but with the Putnams, Duttons and Scribners all above 42d Street, along Fifth Avenue, the new center of the publishing trade may be said to be in the vicinity of the New York Public Library, in its splendid home at Fifth Avenue and 42d Street.

Our friends, who will be welcomed at the new offices, will find us pleasantly situated on the sixth floor of the Lexington Building, at 141 East 25th Street, which is between Lexington and Third avenues, and is best reached by the Lexington, Fourth or Third Avenue surface roads, or from the 23d Street stations of the Subway, Third and Sixth Avenue Elevated and Hudson tube. The new offices are in direct association with our printers, a fact which will increase both the convenience and facilities of the offices. In an early issue we shall give some account of the changes which have recently taken place or are about to take place in the New York trade in this uptown trend; and the younger generation will be interested in comparing present locations with those of a generation ago.

QUESTION came up the other day as to the relative age of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY and the other oldest trade papers of the country. As the oldest living representative of publishing and bookselling, it was desired to find where publishing and bookselling stood in this respect with the other trades. Here is the list as we have dug it out. We would welcome corrections or additions to it:

The PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY TRADE CIRCULAR—the last two words of the title were dropped the following year—was started in January, 1872. It apparently, therefore, ranks sixteenth in the list of American trade papers now in existence. The roll of its predecessors in other fields is an honorable one, each still standing at the head, or near the head, of the organs of its trade.

Trade papers are, as is to be seen, a comparatively recent growth. It took a quarter century to develop sixteen of them; the quarter century following saw their number expanded to over two thousand. Or, more correctly stated, only sixteen were developed that still survive, for the mortality in the trade paper field is and always has been high. The above list is intended to comprise only papers which can record an uninterrupted existence, as many others can trace a lineage as far back or further (the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY itself being in succession to the Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular, which was, in turn, founded back in 1852). Counting its continuous existence under different names, the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY ranks among the very oldest trade papers.

"BOOKS: AN EXTRAVAGANZA."

WRITTEN BY FRANK CRANE FOR THE Independent.

How much better, said my friend Wardlaw, is a book than a show!

You mean you would rather read a book than go to the theatre?

Yes. Tompkins dragged me out the other night. Tompkins is always making me do things I detest. He is the most mediæval mind I know; he still clings to the theory that whatever is the most disagreeable is the best for one. He does not realize that we have in these times abandoned fasting and prayer, and have taken to feasting and believing. I went with him to a playhouse. I was driven through a chute with a herd of my kind into a gaudy room full of bad air, where I sat for three hours in a cramped position. My intelligence was humiliated and my imagination insulted in a desperate effort to reach my emotions and debauch them. I could have stayed at home and read it all much more comfortably in a book.

Has the theatre, then, no place in culture?

It has. So have alphabetical blocks. The theatre is for the people who can't think or won't think. The printed drama I enjoy; when it is acted it bores me. I like to read a play with my imagination only as scene-shifter and costumer. When my mind does its own staging I assure you there is nothing cheap nor childish about the performance. I am not hampered by the exigencies of time and place. Richard rides a real horse. The forest of Arden is not painted canvas. Shylock is a real Jew, and not a mimicking Englishman.

Then, carrying that sort of argument to its end, you would go nowhere?

Why go? Sit still, and the world will come to you. Why this madness to go and see great men? In the first place, you cannot. Most of them are dead. The only place you can find them is in books.

Alas! that is true.

Not alas, but thanks be! If Napoleon were alive an ordinary person like me could not come at him, at least not without a lot of nasty, reportorial obtrusiveness. And even if I should meet him, the only place where such a meeting could take place under conditions at all suitable for a genuine acquaintance would be a desert island upon which we should be shipwrecked together. Calculate the mathematical probabilities of securing an hour's interview with a fellow like Bonaparte. And, in the second place, if we were brought face to face I should not see him at all; it would be at a palace or a parade, and all I should see would be a small, fattish man strutting for my amazement. It is much better to read the memoirs of this and that tattler about him. So I get really under his skin. And while I am doing it I can smoke. And when I am tired of him I can shunt the book. The appalling thing about meeting an emperor anywhere else than in a book is that when he begins to bore you, you cannot get away.

You would not have made pleasant company, then, with Lamb and Ayrton and Mrs. Reynolds, and those others Hazlitt reports in his essay, "Of persons one would wish to have seen"?

I should not have chimed in with them, that's sure. Who would want to see Milton? The best of him is in his rimes, which I have, and the rest of him was doubtless the same poor stuff of personality as yours or mine. And Pope and Sir Thomas Browne, Dryden and Richardson—these are not flesh and blood; their bodies are leather-skinned, with vitals of paper and veins of printer's ink. The readers of Boswell know old Dr. Johnson better than his own mother knew him.

The real souls of men, I suppose you would say, are in their books?

Precisely. No contemporary of Jean Jacques Rousseau saw him as you can see him when you read his "Confessions" and his "Rêveries d'un Promeneur Solitaire." In the printed page the soul awakes. You are brought into the very house of life. The world, I doubt not, is closer to Shakespeare than was Anne Hathaway. I know Bernard Shaw and Chesterton far better than if I had met them.

Singular!

The truth is always singular. Only those untruths and appearances which form the small change of our ordinary "beliefs" and "opinions" are not striking. A real truth is like a hot penny. People drop it quickly. And the fact is that, bodily, we know no man, "nor woman, either." The only knowable things are souls. While in the body, souls are always disguising themselves. The body itself is a disguise. The soul puts up shields, fences and masks of all sorts before it. A man is shy or gruff or pompous, silent or eloquent, merely to keep the world at arm's length. It is only when he writes that we see him. Then his soul is nude as an artist's model. In conversation, there are a thousand reasons for not telling you my real opinion; when I write there is nothing but my real opinion to tell.

When I talk, I address the individual. First, he may not understand me, and make mischief. Secondly, he may understand me, and make worse mischief. You cannot tell your wife just what you think every time. If you did, you would be a brute. It is not hypocrisy that prevents you; it is courtesy and a decent consideration for her feelings. To utter your mind constantly before your children, you would be a monster. Always, in personal intercourse, the character of the person you are addressing limits your free expression.

Now, in writing it is different. There you speak to the ideal reader, who is none other than yourself, made objective. You are face to face with the only man who understands. You can tell the truth, the whole truth, and more than the truth. Hence one's real self is nowhere but in one's books. The self that goes about eating and drinking is a poor prisoner of convention.

The trouble with every-day living is that we are perpetually at the treadmill of doing things we do not want to do, things that do not express us, but conceal us. What have all the daily deeds of mine—acts I care nothing about, words I use merely to get someone to pass the bread, phrases coined to keep the social peace, smiles put on so that my friends will not see how badly I feel—what have these to do with me? What have my coat and breeches to do with me? I put them on to avoid trouble. And most of our conversations, salutations and chit-chat are intellectual coats and breeches. They indicate nothing except a willingness to be respectable.

Daily life is by mutual agreement reduced to formulas of self-repression. The most genteel person, "the glass of fashion and the mold of form," is the one that allows us least to suspect what is going on inside.

It is only in books that life is expressed. Then only can the mind, unclothed and unashamed as the gods upon Hymettus, walk and talk, breathe and live.

The real population of the world is not composed of its human bodies, but of its books. Men come and go; books remain. Life is merely a feeder of literature. Things, which Johnson said are the sons of heaven, pass away, while words, which he called the daughters of earth, remain. Look at that Bible; the men who believed it and the men who disbelieved it have fallen like autumn leaves, and the book itself is evergreen. Here is Dante's poem, still standing like a cathedral, while the author who built it and the thousands who have walked in it lie buried in the churchyard. Here is Shakespeare's book; the men and women in it are more alive to-day than were the queen who patronized and the crowd that gaped at his plays. The characters of Dickens have more reality than Dickens himself; the nobles and millionaires he looked up to are already forgotten, while Uriah Heep and David Copperfield are intimate realities to each succeeding generation.

A book has a personality of its own, quite apart from its author, just as a child cannot be accounted for by his mother and father. A book leads its own life. It extends its mastery over men, independently of their struggles against it, or it dies despite their most meticulous incubation. It wrestles not with flesh and blood, but with other books. Slowly the eternal primacies of literature are formed. Its ranks and nobilities are beyond the devices of men. The realm of books is a theocracy, the only rational form of government. There is no nonsense here of democracy, there is no ridiculous makeshift of heredity; book kings are chosen of God, coming up, like Isaiah's king, from Edon, with dyed garments from Bozrah, crying: I have trodden the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with me. Who can explicate the kingship of the Iliad? When we say it was composed by Homer we are merely flattering humanity, and pretending to understand the mystery of a book by attributing it to the mystery of a man. But I doubt if there ever was a Homer. The Iliad descends to us out of the gray dawn of the world, a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedek, King of Salem, who was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the son of God, abiding a priest forever.

I presume, then, I observed, that you would say that no man lives except the author?

Well, there are degrees of life: a reed lives, and a worm, as well as a philosopher. And of all the universal tide of life, it is the author who experiences its fullest expression. But it is not the man who writes the book that I have in mind so much as the book itself. I am wrapped in wonder as I gaze upon its spiritual power and persistence. Why do men build no more cathedrals? Have you read Victor Hugo's answer to that question? He shows us two men contemplating from a window the church of Notre Dame of Paris; one of them, turning to the other and pointing to an open book upon the table, exclaims, "This eats that." The book is death to the cathedral. All that energy of self-expression the former ages poured into stone and spire they now pour into books.

And are we the better for it?

Better? My friend, the age of the rights of man is nothing but the age of books. The book is the only reformer. It will not die; you cannot hang it, crucify it nor banish it. It was Luther's book, or translation, that brought on the Reformation; it was Jean Jacques' book that produced the French Revolution; it was the books of Huxley and his fellows that made way for the era of science and free inquiry; it was the books of Ruskin, Carlyle and Emerson that kept science from running away with us into materialism, and brought us back to religion; it was Mrs. Stowe's book that abolished American slavery. What is a man, any man, compared to a book? In real value, what has any conqueror done to influence the lives of men, compared with what books have done? What are the exploits of Timour, Alexander and Charlemagne to the results of "The Pilgrim's Progress," "Das Kapital," "Le Contrat Social" and "Progress and Poverty"?

Is a book greater than a man?

A book is a man raised to the nth power. It is the freed spirit of man, disembarassed of his non-essentials. The real superman is a book.

I declare, you make me feel that a library is a very august presence.

You have said. More august than king's councils. Enter into a library. The very air is hushed, heavy with thought. It is as if some still herald trumpeted in noiseless thunder to your soul's ear: For we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal! You are in the privy council of mankind. All around you are the mute rulers of the world. They do not strive nor cry, but they have their way with us. You are in the one room where dreams come true. Here, stripped of its sordidness, life rises like a pure flame, burning not with consuming fire, but with creative joy. Here the sham world is cut out, with its hustling pettiness, its brute thirst and hungers, its poisonous compromises, its successes and failures, both humbugs, and its lies that swarm around every pure aspiration like septic flies. Here is the house at last, as Nero said of his golden palace, fit for a human being to live in. Here is the true landscape of souls; for yonder loom the high mountain peaks of Plato's snow-tipped ideals piercing the veins of heaven, and the misty masses of Kant and Swedenborg; there lie the April fields of Chaucer, the sunny humanities of Boccaccio, the tropic fancies of "The Thousand and One Nights," the bare crags and long, deep shadows of Ibsen, and the romance land of Scott, where

"The orange flower perfumes the bower,
The breeze is on the sea."

You could carry me bodily off with your eloquence, I laughed, if I did not remember that, after all, real life, you know, is—

Real? he interrupted. But what is reality? 'Tis the pons asinorum of metaphysicians. For my part, I say the thing is real that I feel. When I read a thing that grips me it is as real as if it had happened to me. It is pure reality, unmixed with the lying increments of matter. Here are a hundred doors for the escape of the soul. Through any one of them I step into another world. What is intoxication or religion but the attempt to flee the humdrum fraud we call actuality? And here in the library I can do better. I open the door of "Treasure Island" and sail away to summer seas. I lift the latch of "Don Juan" and go upon a pagan philandering. I step through the door of "The Faerie Queen" and am in the morning of England, and I have but to knock at the doors of Verne, Wells and Poe to explore the bottom of the sea, witness the antic of the men of Mars, or voyage to the moon. All the lust of adventure, that in time past men could only gratify at great expense and inconvenience, is now mine, while I repose upon my shoulder-blades with my feet on the table.

No, he continued, let me live and die among books. And when I die, let my transmigration be next into a little worm that feeds upon an Elzevir.

That immortality which men but dream, it is books that have it. All the higher instincts of men find their reality only in books. Man has the shadow, books the substance. Do we dream of living forever? It is only books that gain this we long for. Do we want to be loved for ourselves alone? Books are; no man is. Do we dread old age? Books alone know where is the fountain of youth. Actual life is but a rough sketch. In books, life is well done. Only in precious print do they "live happily ever after."

The book is the candle, and men and women are the moths that fly about it.

It is books that are the eternal personalities; human beings are the little coral insects that build them.

Our histories hitherto have described the deeds of men; future histories will describe the careers of books.

The book is the last resting place of man, the real universal cemetery. Here lie all that remains of the Cæsars and the Ptolemies. Their bones have been stolen from their proud tombs. Books have done for them what all the embalmers of Egypt and the mausoleum builders of Rome could not do.

Great captains of war, politicians, artists, money-makers—it is the humble writer who judges them all, allots them to their heaven in the house of fame, damns them to oblivion, or misspells their names.

The wars of the past were fought with iron tubes charged with powder; the wars of the future will be fought with quill tubes, charged with ink.

Do you know, he went on, after a pause, that I think the ideal marriage would be the meeting of two books. Thus would pure soul mate with pure soul. It is when souls drag bodies along into the affair that trouble is brewed.

And the children?

Out of the union of their ideas would be born the noblest of children—new books.

John, said his wife, who had all the while been sitting by, sewing, John, you are crazy.

I thank you, my dear, he said. The greatest compliment a wife can pay her husband is to admit that she does not understand him.

"It is scarcely to be expected that a clerk will work his hardest for an employer who is interested in him only for what work he can do."

"CAJOLE a man into buying, if you will, but don't attempt anything as old-fashioned as bulldozing or bluffing, browbeating or bribing."

EXPENSIVE FREE EDUCATION—AN INTERVIEW WITH THE PRESIDENT OF THE ILLINOIS FEDERATION OF LABOR.

AN ATTACK BY FORREST CRISSEY ON THE SCHOOLBOOK SITUATION IN ILLINOIS APPEARING IN A RECENT ISSUE OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

DOWNSTATE, in Illinois, is a laboring man who doesn't applaud when the commencement day orator refers to "Our glorious free-school system;" nor does he throw his hat in the air when the president of the school board becomes eloquent over "The common school—our nation's richest heritage!"

The wage-earner's attitude is not due to a lack of interest in education. He has five children of school age, and when the first child came he settled it with his wife that this child—and those that might follow—should be given a good, fair education no matter how hard the load might press upon his shoulders at times. The children should have a better education than their father or their mother had been given—a whole lot better! And the mine-worker and his wife have stuck to this programme through thick and thin—stuck when it hurt and when it meant less meat in the family pot; so it is from no lack of appreciation of the benefits of education that this toiler fails to sparkle up when our common-school system is the subject of eulogy. It is because he is tremendously in earnest about the education of his children that he is a little slow in his applause.

Here's what happened to dampen his ardor: Most of the time since his first child was born he has lived in the same county; but the nature of his work has obliged him occasionally to move from one district to another. Every time he moved—and often when he did not—he found himself obliged to get a new outfit of books for each child. Being a frugal man—he has had to be—all the discarded schoolbooks have been saved. The other day he decided to get them together and see what the collection looked like. He stood them on end close together on a shelf. The line was so long that, just from curiosity, he measured the space it occupied. Just six feet of discarded books! He then figured the cost of these volumes and found it to be thirty-six dollars. This laborer is willing to grant that some of the discards may have been in the interest of progress; but he has a settled conviction that a system which calls for a progressive sacrifice of parental coin on a scale of this sort somehow falls short of being either an ideal or a reasonable system for a man who is trying to rear and educate five children on a laborer's wage. There is a screw loose somewhere, as he looks at it; and he has a suspicion that it is a thumbscrew in the grip of the school-book-makers.

A GOOD PLACE TO STANDARDIZE.

In one Illinois county there are one hundred and fourteen school districts having one hundred and thirteen distinct sets of school-books. In other words, only two districts in that county have the same books or the same course of study. And this county happens to be one in which most of the children come from the families of wage-earners who are comparatively poor. Much the same conditions are to be found in many other counties of Illinois, and in the counties of all other States where uniformity of textbooks has not been established. This has been done in comparatively few States in the Union.

Has the workingman a legitimate kick on the general status of the common-school system, or is he simply suffering from an unreasonable grouch when he says the system is all right for the man in the automobile class, but that it is oppressive to the wage-earner who wants to educate his children?

Possibly there are few men in the country more competent to answer this question than Edwin R. Wright, president of the Illinois Federation of Labor, who still holds his card as a journeyman printer. His first qualification is that he is a thoughtful student of school matters, moderate in temperament and broad in judgment. His official duties have long brought him into intimate contact with wage-earners scattered over a large State—those living in country villages and provincial towns as well as in large cities.

"The wage-earner," declares Mr. Wright, "has a real, solid grievance in connection with the common-school system as it obtains in most of the States of the Union. As a general thing he is keenly appreciative of the good things in that system—I believe no type of parent is more so—but he knows that it piles burdens on his back and imposes on his children handicaps that have no business to be there. I believe these defects could be very largely done away with if the men who are earnestly devoted to the improvement of educational systems could be brought to understand thoroughly the wage-earner's viewpoint—to see just where the collar galls on parent and child. For that reason I am glad to give the laborer's view of what is the matter with our common-school system, and what needs to be done with it in order to fit it to his conditions and necessities.

"In industry and in commerce, in shop and mine and railway, the wage-earner finds that the slogan of the day is: Standardize! But does he find it in the public schools? He does not! Of course there are States and cities that afford shining exceptions to this rule; but, broadly speaking, he finds chaos instead of standardization. And because this chaos helps to fatten a multitude of school-book-makers he naturally suspects there is some connection between the two facts. However, the fact that a change of school district so often means a change of books is not his only grievance on this score of lack of standardization. Perhaps it is the least of his troubles, though certainly it is not a small one. If his main concern is the amount of education his children are able to get in the years before they must go to work, then another feature of this chaotic, hit-or-miss system looms into larger prominence.

"What would uniformity of textbooks save the parents of school-children in this country? The sum is so staggering that I'd rather confine the figures to Illinois, the State with which I am most familiar and in which I have studied this problem for some years. Some authorities say the saving would amount to two dollars or more for every child in our public schools. My own investigations lead me to conclude that this is a little high, but I am certain it would exceed one dollar for every child. As we have nine hundred and ninety-six thousand children attending the public schools of Illinois, the saving for this State by the adoption of uniform textbooks would amount to a round million dollars a year. Figure it out on this basis for your own State.

"But this burden is not a horizontal tariff, borne equally by each family in proportion to the number of children it has attending the public schools. Far from it! The parent who is obliged to move his family from one school district to another with more or less frequency is the one who pays the heavy toll under this systemless system. And what class of citizens mainly constitutes this moving part of the population? Men who own their businesses and their homes, who are in comfortable circumstances and are thoroughly settled in their neighborhoods? By no means. Wage-earners of certain trades requiring a shifting residence make up the main body of this army of short-term residents—men who have to follow their work in order to keep in touch with the pay envelope throughout the year. There are many mine-workers in this class, many who belong to the seasonal trades, the building trades and the semi-scale industries. These are the men who do the rough, hard work of the world and who receive a laborer's wage instead of a salary. On the shoulders of these workers falls the main burden of supporting the schoolbook-makers, who thrive on a system that compels the pupil to throw away a set of expensive and perhaps new books just because the father has been obliged to move into a new district, and to stock up all over again."

FATTENING SCHOOLBOOK HOUSES.

"Again, it should be held in mind that the wage-workers of this class are the ones who are doing most to keep up the stock of citizens. They run to large families. Go through any mining town, for instance, and you will get a quicker and more convincing demonstration of this fact than any array of statistics could afford. Of course you may argue that the wage-worker has no business to raise a big family; but the fact remains that he does, and he will continue to do so—and these children are needed to do the hard work of your State and the nation. But don't miss the point that the men who raise the largest families of school-children are, as a class, those who are obliged most frequently to move from one school district to another.

"Is it any wonder, in view of these facts, that the workingman wants a change in our school system, so that when he follows his work from one district to another he will not be compelled to make a fresh contribution to the schoolbook publishers? This constant toll to the bookhouses, however, is only one part of the penalty the present system of unstandardized schools exacts from the laboring man. If he is greatly in earnest about giving his children a thorough common-school education—and most of them are—it is the smaller part of that penalty. The heavy end is the setback his child has to suffer at every transfer, because there is no uniformity of studies. I know from personal experience all about the educational cost of being 'put back' on changing from one school district to another. My father was a printer and always on the alert to improve his condition by means of a better job. This meant that we occasionally moved from one town to another. Sometimes he was obliged to change because of lack of work, for in those days printed matter was not used so freely as to-day.

"Whenever we moved and I entered a new school I was invariably set back in my class—never less than six months and in one instance an entire year. What was the result? When, at thirteen years of age, I had to quit school and start out as a wage-earner I lacked two years of finishing the grammar grades. In a State having uniform textbooks and study courses I should have completed the grammar studies and perhaps been well along in the high-school course, for I was not a backward student and really wanted an education. The loss of the studies covered by those two years was not a small one to me. I have felt it keenly for years. I had to start as a wage-earner at a dollar and a half a week, and to stick there for some time. This would not, I am satisfied, have been necessary if I had started with the knowledge I could have gained in the studies embraced in the concluding two years of the grammar school.

ONTARIO'S SENSIBLE SYSTEM.

"To a pupil of any spirit, this process of being constantly set back is so discouraging that he is fortunate if it does not sap him of ambition, leave him indifferent to his studies and wreck what educators call the school spirit. That it does this in thousands of cases there is not the slightest doubt. Any teacher will bear testimony to the fact that the real educational results obtained by a year's study when the pupil feels that he is making headway are twice as great as when he is discouraged and expects that probably he'll have to go over at least half the ground again another year. This loss cannot be put into tables and figures, but it is one of the heaviest handicaps imposed upon the children of the wage-earner who occasionally has to follow his work from one district to another. I know what a ball of lead this ties to a pupil's feet, for I've felt it year after year.

"Probably the men who frame the course of study and select the textbooks will say that uniform textbooks and uniform courses of study are not practical throughout a whole State. I think I've heard something of this kind before. But the laboring men of the country are not satisfied with that answer. They want uniform textbooks and uniform courses of study in the elementary and grammar grades. The miner who finds himself obliged to move from Spring Valley to Springfield wants to know that he isn't going to be forced to buy a new outfit of books for each one of his children because of his change of residence; but, most of all, he wants to know that his children will be able to take up their work in the new school right where they left off in the one from which they were withdrawn. Those are the two main planks in the wage-earner's educational platform, and I believe he's going to keep hammering away at them until they are nailed into the working school policy of State after State. How long could any big manufacturing concern keep up its end of competition if its departments were as little co-ordinated as the public schools in the states where uniform textbooks and uniform courses of study have not yet become the order of the day? Almost any industry you can name is far more thoroughly standardized, as a whole, than our public schools.

"Almost the first objection raised against the plan of uniform textbooks is that it breeds graft; that when you give a small group of men the power to select the textbooks for a whole State the temptation is too great for them and for the representatives of the schoolbook houses, and that money and influence are wrongfully used. That's too bad! But still the wage-earner can't see in this a valid reason why he should continue to stack up discarded books to the profit of the schoolbook houses, or why he should be satisfied to see his children lose a year or two years out of the educational course they are fairly entitled to complete in the too-short period they are able to spend in the schoolroom.

"Up in Canada they take care of this matter of furnishing schoolbooks in the way it should be done—in the way that the workman wants it done in this country. There, in the Province of Ontario, the copyrights of all schoolbooks are vested in a minister of education and in his board of advisers, who select the books for their educational value. Text-books and courses of study are uniform throughout the province. When a publisher or a printer wants to get into the schoolbook game he has to bid for his chance—not bidding on how much he will pay the State for the privilege, but on how low a price he will make to the people on a certain book of specified paper, print, binding and general physical and artistic excellence.

"There the people own and control the schoolbook industry, and the parents who buy the books get the benefit of this proprietorship direct, at first hand and in proportion to the number of books they buy. Remember, under this system there can be no cheapening of the product, for the book is rigidly standardized in all particulars. No matter who gets the contract, he cannot cheapen the book by using inferior materials or less of them. The book must be up to an exact standard as to every element that enters into it.

"The primer is the first book placed in a child's hands. There are probably more primers used than any other schoolbook, for the reason that all must start with it, while classes become thinner and thinner as they advance in grade. Recently I bought the primer now in use in Ontario and published under the conditions I have described. It is a well-made book in every particular—good paper, good presswork, good binding, and the typesetting and makeup are of first-class order. It has a two-color frontispiece, an artistic cover and numerous illustrations. This primer costs the Ontario parent just four cents.

THE BEST BOOKS NOT TOO GOOD.

"The Ontario First Reader costs the parent six cents, while its parallel takes thirty cents from the wage-earner in the United States. Certain writing books used in the Ontario schools cost the parents there only one cent each. These books are not cheap books. Their contents are passed upon by the educational authorities of the province, and they are made 'for the children' all the way through.

"This is the plan the workman of the United States wants to put into operation here. It works in Ontario—why not here? It saves the parents of the province hundreds of thousands of dollars a year; it would save the parents of our own school children millions of dollars annually. And most of that saving would be made by wage-earners who are obliged to shift their residences to keep employed—wage-earners who raise the big families. There is only one reason in the world why this system cannot now be adopted and put into operation in the States—and that reason is the school-book interest!

"I want to emphasize the fact that our workmen are not after cheap school books—that is, books of inferior educational value. We want the best books that can be had. This is the way we look at it: When our children go to school they are handed the tools with which to fashion their working equipment for a lifetime. Poor books are poor tools, and they generally mean a corresponding deficiency in the educational result. From an intimate knowledge of the mental attitude of the wage-earner toward school matters, I feel sure there is not one worker in my State who would not willingly pay the present exorbitant prices for his children's books if he were convinced that such prices represented the real educational value of the books. If the Illinois primer, at twenty-five cents, were worth six times as much—as an educational tool—as the Ontario primer, at four cents, he would cheerfully pay the larger price; but he knows this is not the case. He knows that he is helping to pay an unjust profit to school-book houses, amounting to at least a million dollars a year. We do not object to having those publishers make a reasonable profit upon the money invested in their plants—that is right and legitimate. Neither do we wish to take from teachers, educators and pedagogic specialists a generous incentive to originate and compile the best possible text-books; but we do object to having the educational necessities of our children exploited to fatten the dividends of book houses that send a small army of costly agents and profligate 'entertainers' through the country to influence sales and adoptions!

"When we can look across the border into conservative Ontario and see the copyrights of all school books owned and controlled by the people and for the people, is it strange that we want a change? When we can see there a uniform course of study, with uniform text-books, and see those books produced on a basis of one profit only between the maker and the pupil, with all the extravagant and vicious selling system in vogue in the United States entirely eliminated, is it any wonder that the wage-worker is hot under the collar and gives due notice that there's got to be a change? Has he not a real kick—and a hard one, too? He needs all that wasted money to give his children just so much better education; and when he thinks of the ground that he and his children have lost in setbacks, because of a school system under which each district is a law unto itself, and no uniformity of study courses is provided for, then he knows he is entitled to two kicks."

THE GRUB STREET PROBLEM.

BEING A CONSIDERATION OF THE SCRIBE AND THE COST OF LIVING IN VARIOUS PERIODS.

PART I.—IN SHAKESPEARE'S TIME.

FEW quotations bob up so temptingly, says Algernon Tassin in a most readable series of articles inaugurated in a recent issue of The Bookman, initiating what promises to be a most entertaining series of articles, as the Psalmist's remark, "Of making many books there is no end." It makes one throw considerations of triteness to the winds when he finds a statement some thousands of years old fluttering so fresh and pertinent (indeed, fresher and more pertinent than ever—as has been said many hundred times in all the ages since!). In Elizabeth's day, when first in England the Grub Street problem leaves a recorded imprint upon an insensible public, we find local psalmists similarly lamenting. A generation later, in 1632, Wither writes: "Good God, how many dungboats of fruitless works do they yearly foist on His Majesty's subjects!" As a matter of fact, however, the total number of entries in the Stationers' Register for that year (though it did not, of course, include the entire number of publications) amounted to just two a week. It may be guessed, therefore, that some laments of authors are not entirely trustworthy. An author's complaint of an overstocked market may mean merely that there are on it too many books of other people's. The originator of the remark, though he seems to have had the same lofty disdain for the lucubrations of others, was perhaps the only one entirely uninfluenced by fears of a ruinous competition.

Thus is one led to inspect other incessant complaints of the tribe. It was early in the days of James I. that authors began to grumble against inadequate rewards. This is one of the best historical illustrations of the fact that if you give a man an inch he will demand an ell. For it was only in the latter half of the sixteenth century that the commendable practice had begun of paying authors anything at all for their work. Like many other conditions which have prevailed in their business, this state of affairs had been largely their own fault. So many authors wrote only for the love of the thing and thought all commercial dealings vulgar, that the publishers could supply their meager and precarious market without adding to their risks by paying their scribes—especially when those who desired money were of the poorer sort, materially, at any rate, and hence had fewer friends among buyers. Publishers, too, counted on getting hold of manuscripts which were being privately circulated in genteel circles and printing them for nothing. Let any modern (even an author!) who would not do the same thing under like conditions cast the first stone. Shakespeare seems to have known well enough that no outsider could hope to get on with gentlemen of the court if he consented to have his works printed at all, to say nothing of driving a bargain with a bookseller. Furthermore, no modern (even an author!) should forget how small was the early demand for printed books. Even in Wither's day, the market could not stand much more than two books a week. Perhaps Wither overlooked this when he wrote: "The Bookseller hath made Authors labour for his profit at his owne price." The author's complaint of inadequate rewards just as soon as he began to receive anything at all for his work may not be in itself conclusive. He complains to-day. "Inadequate" may only have meant that he thought the publisher was getting the lion's share.

It is possible that authors in that day, no less than this, had rosy ideas of what the publisher was making out of them. And not the author only, but readers then and since. To cite Milton takes us out of our chronology, but the case is more apt than most. Milton was certainly a very unpromising venture when he sold the bulky manuscript of "Paradise Lost" to Simmons for five pounds down and the promise of a further five when the first edition was exhausted, and of two like sums at the end of the second and third editions if called for. Simmons was pretty small fry, and he was possibly, therefore, the only publisher whom Milton found willing to take the risk. He made three payments on the poem, eighteen pounds in all—and made on the venture, according to Doctor Masson, about five or six times what he paid the author. This is certainly not overmuch, considering his interest on his capital, the risk of his original expenditure, and his expenses in establishing the book in the unusual and original way he employed. The success of this latter effort, though equally unusual, does not seem to have been large enough to keep him from selling the copyright for seven pounds more than it cost him, about fifteen years afterward. That a succeeding publisher, at a time when the market had grown larger, reaped rich returns on it, was not Simmons' fault, and it certainly was not his fortune. Yet abuse has been heaped upon his head by all subsequent generations of readers and authors (to the latter of whom it would, of course, be no justification to say that a publisher nowadays could not run his business unless he made as much on his average successful book).

Milton, says a recent writer, was forced to sell his immortal epic for the price of a week's board. There are two significant points about this appealing statement. The first is that the writer is thinking of the price of board in his own day, and rather sumptuous board at that. And it is this aspect of the matter which this article will examine in some detail. Secondly, Milton knew when he was writing "Paradise Lost" that he was writing something for which there would be no immediate great demand; and yet he wrote it. He did so not for money, then, but to satisfy an inner demand, regardless of material considerations.

The assumption of the author that the world owes him a living in the only way he cares to make it is more personally gratifying than logical. If a person will spend his time making something which no one wants or wants enough to pay well for it, that is his own affair. If what he produces is precious, it is pitiable that in its own market it commands small price; but how can it be helped! The only reason it has been worth while to sound his ungracious string is because this eternal assumption of the author has its vital reflection in his expenditure; and it is necessary for us to examine his budget if we would get at the truth of the Grub Street problem.

That a genius should be slipshod is probably temperamental (or used to be), and therefore not to be helped; but the contention that the world owes him a living seems, on examination, to be built upon the idea that people must buy what they don't want, even if they ought to want it, of one kind of manufacturer more than of another. Queen Elizabeth's tart reply to a needy author who thrust himself upon her is one which a contemporary world has made to authors from time immemorial, and the subsequent generation which censures it is itself busy replying in like manner to authors of its own age, just as the authors who also bitterly censure it are themselves making it to manufacturers of other commodities (many of which require brains and imagination of just as high an order). When Richard Robinson—a tedious writer, who would insist on scribbling what was already a drug upon the market—demanded that the Queen pay him for dedicating a book to her, she answered that she had all she could do to support her armies (which, of course, was a whopper!), and she did not see why she should pay for something she did not desire, in support of a work she had not set him on to do. The Grub Street problem of all ages can be stated in a way as uningratiating as it is simple. If people who must live by their work insist upon making something for which there is no demand, or something which they do not exercise ordinary business sense in selling, they must live on Grub Street. Other people pay for gratifying their tastes or for lacking common sense, why should not authors?

INACCURACIES OF AUTHORS' ACCOUNTS.

Nevertheless, this Grub Street may not be as real and inevitable a thoroughfare as sentiment has liked to fancy. Authors' accounts of their moneys have generally been unreliable, and their expenditure has rarely adapted itself to their income. Poor John Stow is a case in point. He—the most accurate historian of the Elizabethan era!—said that he "made no gains by his travails." For his "Survey of London" (from which quotation is so often made in this article) he received three pounds and forty copies to sell for his own profit; and for his "Brief Chronicle" he was paid twenty shillings and fifty copies. It is not contended that these were large prices, only that his statement was inaccurate. Nor were these prices so pitiful as they appear. Stoddard, in the same age, paid to a schoolmaster for a quarter's schooling and board two pounds eight pence. The yearly salary of "one godly learned preacher" appointed to Ripon was thirty pounds, of his two assistant ministers fifteen pounds, of two lesser assistants, six pounds ten shillings, of two clerks three pounds. All these had their lodging free, it is true, but they were allowed to hold no other preferment; and the six clerks of the city received three pounds a year, without board or lodging. Thus, if Stow received three pounds in cash for his book, besides the six pounds he might have derived from his gift copies, he received one-tenth of a bishop's yearly salary and the entire yearly salary of the town clerk. This is little enough, to be sure, for a book which (along with his "Brief Chronicle") had cost him not only the best part of his life, but of his little fortune besides. Yet both his labor and the money he had laid out with it were an investment of love; and people have done the same collecting butterflies. James I. gave Stow the right to appeal "for kind gratuities," and he seems (alas!) to have been reduced to asking them with a basin on the street. But had James been accused of niggardliness, he might have replied in his predecessor's words that there were people enough relying on him, and he hadn't asked Stow to give up his lifetime to writing books, much less to expend his fortune on them.

Ben Jonson, too, was yielding to the general inaccuracy of authors when he told Drummond that he had not got above two hundred pounds for all the works he had ever written. He not only received the usual amounts paid for plays, but he had a great deal out of his dedications besides. Furthermore, James I. gave him a pension of about thirteen shillings a year, and though this was a small sum, it was certainly not intended to be satirical; the city gave him a pension of one hundred nobles a year; Pembroke gave him regularly a New Year's gift of twenty pounds, and the Duke of Newcastle was also a generous supporter—all because he was a poet. The distressingly humble tone of his letters and dedications to noble patrons was thus either conventional or indicated a nature as improvident as this age would decree it servile, however in so sturdy a man. In the budget for the army, in Elizabeth's later years, the wages and victuals of two clerks, two millers, four bakers, and four laborers, for the entire year, were reckoned at one hundred and fifty pounds—not much over twelve pounds apiece, and doubtless some of these men had families to support. If twelve pounds would keep a clerk or a miller, it certainly could have supported without hardship a man who was raised a bricklayer and had been a common soldier in the army. Here was Jonson with forty pounds a year, at the lowest, at a time when twenty pounds a year and heavy duties for it represented the condition of a squire. Harrison, whose "Description of England" covers the years 1577-1587, the time of Shakespeare's youth, has shown us that forty pounds a year (though it could not "perform any great thing") was able to maintain him and his family in much comfort. His wife brewed yearly three hogsheds of beer of a sort "as is meete for poor men such as I am to live withal, whose small maintenance may endure no deeper cut. The charges whereof grow in this manner. I value my malt at ten shillings, my wood at four shillings, my hops at twenty pence, servant's wage at two shillings six pence with meat and drink, and the wearing of my vessels at twenty pence—so that for my twenty shillings I have ten score gallons of beer or more." Thus forty pounds a year, especially for one who was not maintaining a family and a settled social position, and who in his youth was entirely unaccustomed to luxuries or even to regular necessities, was quite sufficient to keep him at a fairly handsome level of living. Where was Jonson's money going? One would be glad for a detailed account of the expenditure of an author in Elizabethan and Jacobean days.

DEDICATIONS THE FIRST ROYALTIES

This same Richard Robinson is the only Elizabethan writer who has left a detailed account of his earnings, and he, unfortunately, was writing before authors were generally paid. He says that he usually got nothing for his books from the publisher except copies which he sold to his friends. (At least his estate in this particular was better than the modern author, all of whose friends expect free copies!) In the majority of cases he speaks of "Making profit" of twenty-five books. Except for the money received for dedication, there is nowhere any mention of other profit than his own sale of these copies. These twenty-five copies, too, seem to have sufficed for as many editions as the publisher could print, although Robinson was able to extract a new dedication fee for each edition. He had two shillings sixpence from the Master of the Leathersellers and seven shillings sixpence from the company for dedicating a book to them. Sir Philip Sidney gave him four angels, and Sir Henry ten shillings for dedications. The choice of a patron, then—as Robinson found when he unluckily tackled the Queen and some other noble personages—was an important matter in the early part of Elizabeth's reign.

Though it continued important for many years to come, a generous patron and the bestowal by the publisher of free copies for the author to sell, ceased shortly to be his only means of remuneration. By the end of the century it was generally recognized that an author had a right to get something more definite and more reliable out of his work. Some of the privileged publishers even went so far as really to hire authors to write books. The Rev. William Fulke was brought on to London by his publishers, supported with two men servants and three horses for nine months, and given forty pounds cash for his work. This was unique, but it shows at least that the opinion had begun to prevail, in spite of the silly practices of gentlemen writers and some snobbish imitators, that an author was worthy of his hire.

PUBLISHING CONDITIONS IN ELIZABETH'S TIME.

The book world of Elizabeth's day was in a state of the utmost confusion on account of three contending elements—the printer and the bookseller and the Crown. Elizabeth's royal printer in the first part of her reign had a salary of about six and one-half pounds a year (one-sixth of Jonson's income). But he had, besides, rich pickings as a monopolist. His privileges and those of several others, granted by the Queen, bore so heavily on the smaller men of "such as do lyve by bookselling," that they began to pirate their licensed rival's copyrights. So embarrassed were they by the monopolies and privileges conferred upon the richer members of their trade, that it was extremely difficult for them to pick up even a piratical living. But this condition of affairs proved equally fortunate to the men who were to become professional writers and to succeeding generations. For the privileged booksellers were too busy with their monopolies and with printing for nothing the manuscripts of gentlemen to bother with risks of any sort. Consequently, it is to the piratical and hand-to-mouth publishers that we owe our first professional class of authors, and all of the dramatic and much of the poetical and popular literature in the reign of Elizabeth and James. When the unlicensed bookseller finally had won his war with the Queen and with the printer, he had established (without particularly meaning to do so) the class who lived by their pens. His fight for a living had obliged him to lure writers to turn their hands to anything which promised returns for him; and thus began the extensive pamphlet and ballad publication of the day. Pamphlets of a controversial or a scurrilous nature, and topical street ballads, both written on any excitement of the hour, poured in an unending torrent from the precarious presses. Ballads sold for a penny, and a ballad vendor was known to have taken in as much as twenty shillings on a fair day. A publisher who specialized in them once registered one hundred and twenty-three of them at one time. As for pamphlets, any occasion would suffice to spawn them; and if the matter were libellous, there needed no occasion whatever to persuade the publisher it was likely to prove a paying investment. The more "fat and pepper in the nose," the quicker and bigger the sale.

The competition being great for the racier of the pamphlets, they paid very well. "Forty shillings!" says a wit in a fictitious dialogue with a publisher who had offered him this amount for a promising libel; "a fit reward for one of your rheumatic poets! But as for me, I'll be paid dear for the very dregs of my wit." Gentlemen of the Sidney type would have had reason enough in the latter days of Elizabeth for wishing to hold aloof from dealing with publishers, since writing had become a rather unsavory trade; nevertheless, now, for the first time, many people were living by it, and if the best of these endured privations it was for some other reason than because they were not paid enough to escape them. There was abundant, though it may be irregular, demand for successful pamphleteers; and Nashe wrote of Greene—both professional literary men—that the work of a day and a night sufficed to turn out a pamphlet. For the ordinary pamphlet, a publisher paid two pounds or even more. That is to say, Nashe, who turned out some of the most highly spiced and therefore highly priced of these pamphlets, and pleaded his poverty as excuse for the most scandalous of them, received for the work of a day and a night the entire yearly salary of the town clerk of Ripon.

Besides writing pamphlets and ballads to eke out the proceeds of his more serious labors, the hack-writer could do translating. This was generally poorly paid work, as it is now, but still it was something steadily coming in; for translations were always being published. With them the writer had often, as in the earlier days, to content himself with copies as payment. In the later Jacobean days, newssheets began to be issued in London, and the translation of foreign ones offered another small and steady source of income to the professional writer. So much did he rely on this, that the manufacture of foreign news was by no means uncommon in times of scarcity. Almost all of the band of poets who earned the major part of their living in the theatre were glad to do jobs of hack-writing. They would, thus, be engaged turning out pamphlets and ballads and translations for the publishers.

EARNINGS OF THE PLAYWRIGHTS.

There was much hack-writing for the theatres also. Plays were constantly being revived, and, in a time when theatrical fashions changed and theatrical education grew overnight, constantly altered for the revivals. The jobs of revision and addition bore a relation to the popularity of the playwright, but the regular fee for a prologue and epilogue was five shillings. The author seems to have received a fee, too, for altering his play for a production at court. The company received a fee for playing at court, but whether the author was given one also is not known.

The highest price which we know any manager to have paid for a play is twenty-five pounds, but from six to ten seems to have been the usual price. Sometimes, too, the author had a bonus for the first night; and there is reason to believe that in certain cases, and possibly regularly, he had a benefit on one of the following nights. Heywood says some of the playwrights sold their plays to publishers as well as to managers, and incurred "great suspicion of honestie by this double sale of their labours." But this suspicion was of early date. Apparently, managers who had begun by being very jealous of their manuscripts, and authors, who had for one reason or another been indifferent to printing, discovered in course of time that they could not keep their plays out of the hands of pirates and decided to get what profit they could from authorized publication. The sale of plays to publishers seems in later years to have become an established part of the business of writing and producing them. At the customary price of sixpence a copy, the royalty on a popular play which went through several editions must have been considerable, even if it had to be divided between author and manager. This is very likely, since managers soon got to selling plays in the theatre itself. For a spectator to carry a book to the show was a common occurrence. When the play was published, too, the author could always make forty shillings more by dedicating it to some theatre-loving patron. As for being out of pocket for the running expenses of his profession, he had—as nowadays—free admission to all the theatres; nor apparently did he have to pay even for refreshments when he read his play to the company at a neighboring inn. Henslowe puts down in his expense account five shillings' worth of "good cheer" consumed at an author's reading in the Sun in New Fish Street, and at "The Tavern" they had two shillings' worth of wine. Shakespeare, of course, made the bulk of his money as sharing-actor, not as playwright. Mr. Wallace calculates that his yearly profits at the Globe alone ran as high as three hundred pounds, while Collier estimates his income in 1608 at four hundred pounds. This should mark him off sufficiently from the playwright, whose sole earnings came from his pen, but these playwrights—in spite of the popular impression to the contrary—did not fare so badly.

THE CASE OF DEKKER.

It is the general opinion of critics that Dekker led a wretched existence. Though he did not write as much as Heywood, who, according to his own account, had "an entire hand or at least a main finger in two hundred and twenty plays," still his industry was highly praised by his contemporaries. It is difficult, then, to see, as Miss Mary Leland Hunt proves, in a recent monograph upon him, that his income during the major part of his working life was not fairly comfortable. Dekker is known to have within five years, says Miss Hunt, assisted in thirty plays and produced eight unaided. During the first of these years he was paid for five collaborations and a comedy, besides hack-work of alteration and addition. His receipts, then, for this year were about forty pounds, and during the second year somewhat more. Furthermore, in addition to this most respectable income, he was at various times receiving money for his pamphlets. Nevertheless, it is during these five profitable years that we hear mention of his poverty; and Ben Jonson accused him of impecuniosity and shabby clothes. Twice during the early days of this lucrative period, Dekker was in prison. If it was for debt and debt conscientiously incurred, it must have been caused by the irregularity of his income, rather than its slenderness. Both of these times Henslowe advanced the money to get him out, two pounds and three pounds and a half; and, besides this, he was always borrowing small sums from that shrewd manager, who seems to have sized up his writers pretty well in never allowing any of them to get much in his debt. Where could the money of that charming and tender sloven Dekker have gone in all these years?

Almost every playwright in Elizabeth's time had to reckon with the jail, except that child of fortune, Shakespeare, whose early scrape seemed to have cured him of the habit; and imprisonment for small debts was with them the commonest of occurrences. Nor need a person have been careless and improvident, like Dekker, to see the inside of one. Even the sober-living Chettle was twice released by papa Henslowe for small sums. Indeed, in the days when there were at least five debtors' prisons on the south side of the Thames, everybody was doing it. Later in his life, when Dekker's earning capacity was much less, he went to King's Bench for debt and stayed there seven years; the canny Henslowe would not have cared to help him out then. "There is ten pounds more at least to be received for the plays," wrote Nat. Fields to Henslowe from the Marshalsea. "We desire you to lend us five pounds." Daborne and the moral Massinger added a word also, and signed the appeal. Not only for petty debts alone were the Elizabethan playwrights always going to prison; they often got into trouble with the government for meddling with politics and religion. Nashe, for instance, went to the Fleet for writing the libellous "Isle of Dogs." Consequently, in listing the daily expenditure of the Elizabethan writers, we must put down his expenses in prison—one of the few reckonings which he could not carelessly evade.

At some of the prisons a person could diet himself or accept the county allowance. At Queen's Bench, if he was able to pay, he had to do so. The poorer class of debtors starved on the yieldings of one or two habitual but inadequate charities, and died of want or of cold. In 1586 and 1593, the prisoners of the Fleet petitioned against the grievous abuses of the management. The warden farmed out this to his two deputies, who extorted whatever they could. His own fees were enormous; and the deputies had to cover this and their rental before they could make anything. For the commitment and one week's "dyett" of an archbishop, duke or duchess was twenty-one pounds ten shillings; of a knight five pounds; of an esquire, three pounds six shillings eight pence; of a poor man in the wards to pay for his fee and having no "dyett," seven shillings four pence. So the imprisoned playwrights absolutely lost money by going to prison for debts—they could have lived well, as we shall see, for less than half of that outside. The pawnbroker's shop—the half-way house to a debtor's prison—did a flourishing business also. The pawnbrokers made no "merry bonds" with their victims. Three pounds on ten was the usual figure, with a monthly interest of sixteen pence a pound, the bill to be each month renewed.

Yet, when you have enumerated prisons, pawnshops and that third pest, as James I. would have called it—tobacco—you have mentioned almost all the daily necessities of the Elizabethan writer, which were more costly in his day than ours. Elderly people and statisticians were, it is true, complaining of a greater advance in the cost of living, but that did not affect him. Contrary to our own experience, it was the laborer and the servant who suffered; for their wages remained stationary. A serving man in 1598 said that during his lifetime all ordinary articles had trebled in price, although his wages were the same as his great-grandfather's. To-day it is the lower middle class which suffers most, but in Elizabeth's time, although these did not much profit by the general rise in prices, they did gain greatly in increased comfort and in luxuries. But the writers certainly had no complaint coming on account of their rate of payment remaining what it had been when commodities were cheaper. For they had practically never been paid before, and had not as a class before existed.

THE HIGH COST OF PRICE CUTTING.

A HOMELY EXAMPLE WHICH BRINGS OUT THE POINT THAT IN THE END IT IS THE PURCHASER WHO SUFFERS MOST FROM PRICE CUTTING.

THE Smith family—father, mother and children—are fond of breakfast food, says Lee Galloway, Professor of Commerce and Industry, New York University, in a crisp essay in the April number of Everybody's Magazine. Properly garnished with sugar and cream, some one of two or three favorite varieties of corn, wheat, or oats appears on the family table every morning, and not uncommonly for Sunday-night supper. Mrs. Smith has been buying the familiar packages for ten cents at Prouty's corner grocery ever since she introduced them into the family bill of fare.

One morning two months ago she came upon an advertisement in the newspapers in which a merchant, a mile farther downtown, proclaimed the economy of shopping with him, and announced one brand of the Smith favorites at eight cents. A 20 per cent. reduction in the high cost of living made warm appeal to Mrs. Smith, and the next time she went downtown she dropped into this merchant's store and bought one package. Mr. Smith said "Good!" when she told him about it.

A week later, when she asked Mr. Smith to repeat the errand, he did not care so much about it, but properly obeyed orders. The next time, a month later, it was not convenient for either of them to go a mile downtown for breakfast food, and Mrs. Smith regretfully restored the item to the list of purchases at the neighborhood market.

That part of the order came back unfilled. Prouty said he didn't keep it, and the Smith family had something else the next morning.

Mr. Smith got provoked when his wife told him about it. "How ridiculous," he said, "that a live store in this part of the town should not keep such a standard product as that. I'll drop in and see Prouty about it on my way to the car."

Prouty admitted that he did not carry that brand any more and didn't intend to. He could not sell it at eight cents at a profit; he could not sell it at ten cents at all, with an eight-cent quotation from another store flaring in the newspapers. So he let the downtown store that had drawn his customers by unfair competition—baiting them with breakfast food sold at a loss—have his trade in that article.

When Mr. Smith found that the other neighborhood stores had also stopped carrying his breakfast food and that he must either buy at the cut-rate store or go without, he was irritated. This looked like petty retaliation. He would rather pay ten cents than go a mile downtown when his supply of breakfast food gave out unexpectedly. Of course, he hated to be robbed, but the convenience of neighborhood shopping on such occasions was worth the extra two cents that he had formerly paid willingly for his article. Prouty ought to have more consideration for his customers.

"SOMETHING JUST AS GOOD."

Mr. Smith's irritation was increased when the downtown store, having exhausted the general trade-drawing possibilities of this sort of unfair competition, and being just as keen to do business at a profit as Prouty, raised the price to nine cents, and finally to ten cents, per package. To protesting customers the downtown store offered substitutes of some house brand at eight cents, which it declared was "just as good," though the Smith family didn't think so. Finally the downtown store ceased to carry Smith's favorite.

Then Smith began to investigate. He asked Prouty why he didn't restore the brand. The answer was illuminating. His customers now assumed that eight cents was a fair price for this article, and the extra two cents, which Prouty needed to keep his store going, appeared to them extortion. They would not pay it. They said Prouty had been cheating them for years on this article and they knew it.

The market for it at a fair price had been destroyed.

Smith learned a lot out of that little experience, the inquiries he made, and the thinking he did. He began to suspect that the old maxim, "Let the buyer beware," might be fairly expanded to read: "Let the buyer beware of price-cutting on his favorite trade-marked staples." He also discovered to his surprise that there was a difference between a bargain in potatoes and a bargain in a trade-marked article carrying with it the reputation of the manufacturer. He studied the ethics of selling, and made some discoveries that were new to him, and that upset some of his previous convictions on merchandising.

He discovered that the consumer ultimately pays a high price for "price-cutting" in standard trade-marked articles.

"ONE PRICE TO ALL."

Over in Europe, in many shops, as in the Orient in every shop, a customer must haggle, waste time, and finally buy at a compromise price. And even then he knows that he has been cheated. When A. T. Stewart, three generations ago, revolutionized the retail business by marking the prices plainly on all goods in his store, he made the first great ethical advance in merchandising. Smith hadn't thought about that. With one stroke this great merchant had abolished the demoralizing custom of haggling. This one price to all was heralded as a great moral as well as an economic advance. It cut down the time required for shopping, and reduced the number of salesmen needed in a store where customers could see the prices for themselves. This cheapened the expense of selling and thus ultimately reduced the price of the goods.

Business made another step forward when the salesman on the road was able to sell by sample, instead of carrying with him great quantities of goods for instant delivery. Back of sample buying must be commercial confidence on the part of the buyer that the seller will deliver according to representation. Society gained through the saving in the cost of distribution.

Smith found out why he couldn't get his favorite breakfast food after he had studied the latest advance in merchandising: the advent of standardized staple goods, old friends that include breakfast foods, soups, biscuits, soaps, shoes, hats, corsets, hosiery, toilet ar-

An enterprising dealer in Ohio has had printed a special slip cover for each book in his library, the outside of the cover bearing his imprint, with the following rules and regulations:

"There are no membership fees or advance payments.

The charge is two cents a day, or part of day.

Minimum payment on each book to be four cents.

When a book is returned, the amount due must be paid for in cash, no charge account being kept for new Fiction Library.

Persons drawing books will be held responsible for their return in good condition. Books mutilated or lost will be charged for at regular retail prices, and the rent on these continues until such books are paid for or replaced in the Library. Under no circumstances will Library Books be sent or called for.

No catalogue is issued, as books are constantly being added as published.

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE THIS COVER."

Another dealer in Oklahoma uses a similar paper cover for each volume, with the following notices appearing on the margins of the cover:

"This book was taken out.....

Books with pages turned down or torn, cannot be returned and must be paid for.

We request patrons to be as careful of our books as they are of their own."

A successful dealer in Missouri places a small slip, about three by five inches, in each book, as follows:

This book belongs to

1. PAY CASH when you return the book. There are no charge accounts kept in the Library. The rentals are too small and numerous to justify charging to anybody.

2. A charge of 2 cents a day or fraction of a day will be made on all books for the Time Out of the Library.

3. Persons renting books will be held responsible for the safe keeping and return of the book in good condition. In case book is lost or injured the price of the book must be paid by the person taking it out.

THE RENTAL LIBRARY.

If for any reason it seems advisable in a certain community to require a deposit of $1 or more, a membership fee may be charged and a certificate issued. The following sample is from the cover of a four-page circular giving a list of 125 titles of books used in a successfully conducted rental library in Kansas:

"Certificate of Membership in the New Circulating Library of Standard Publications.

Rules and Regulations.

Each member is entitled to one book at a time, and must return it within two weeks from the time it is taken. The Librarian will check the day and month on which the book is taken out and returned. Members may change books as often as they please. A fine of the value of the book will be charged to any member not returning it, and no other will be given unless the rules and regulations are complied with—also rules and regulations of Librarian.

The members are not allowed to lend out books except to their own family.

One of the prosperous circulating libraries in the city of St. Paul issues a small booklet with the titles of 500 well-selected volumes alphabetically arranged by author. The plan of this library is indicated by a table,* which appears in the first two pages of the booklet:

Frequently patrons of a library will lose or damage a volume, and to avoid any controversy arising over the value of a book in this case, an ingenious dealer in Evanston, Ill., has printed a small gum label which reads, "The present price of this book is $....." As the book becomes worn, the selling price may be reduced in proportion to the condition. The purchaser may at any time have the right to buy the volume at the marked price. The retail price of the volume should be entered upon the card, as a fixed charge against the customer in case the volume is never returned.

Some rental librarians prefer to keep their books in slip-cover cases, although this is not frequently done. These cases may be obtained, however, in about three convenient sizes, at five or six cents each.

A dealer in Chicago, who conducts a rental library containing over one thousand volumes, numbers the books consecutively and places them on the shelves in his store in this order. This forms a convenient method of finding any book desired by referring to the index.

A handy reference list should be kept on hand, as many patrons will select their books by title from a list, rather than look over a number of shelves in order to find something of interest. An indexed book of two or three hundred pages answers as a simple form for this record. For the sake of the advertising purposes, some dealers have argued that it is

".....'s Circulating Library is devoted exclusively to fiction. All the late novels are procured as soon as published in sufficient quantities so that members will not be caused needless delay in securing the books they want. As soon as books become soiled they are withdrawn from circulation. You may join by the week—starting and stopping at any time—or by the year.

The weekly plan is as follows: After making a deposit of one dollar, books may be procured from the library at any time upon payment of 15 cents for a single book, and 10 cents additional for each extra book. These books may be kept one week, after which time a fine of 2 cents a day, or 10 cents a week, will be imposed for each book held over. The deposit of $1.00 will be refunded upon request when the books are returned.

A yearly payment of $5.00 for one book, and $3.50 additional for each extra book, will entitle members to take books at any time, books may be exchanged as often as desired. No book will be loaned for more than two weeks without renewal, and books kept longer than that time will be charged for at the rate of 2 cents a day, or 10 cents a week, for each book. Extra books may be obtained upon the payment of 10 cents each. Extra books may be kept for one week only, after which time the usual fine of 2 cents a day, or 10 cents a week, will be imposed.

IMPORTANT

A book which has been loaned on the regular plan must be in our hands before another book may be taken, or it will be counted as an extra book and charged for accordingly. If books are soiled or damaged while in a member's possession, the member will be expected to pay for such damage in proportion to the value of the book and the extent of the injury. Books are not to be lent out of the borrower's household. The holder of a membership is responsible for all books drawn by means thereof.

One book.....15c. a week, or $5.00 a year
Two books.....25c. a week, or 8.50 a year
Three books.....35c. a week, or 12.00 a year
Each extra book.....10c. a week, or 3.50 a year better not to distribute a list of books in the circulating library, but, on the other hand, to place a large sign in the window, reading, "Come in and let us explain our circulating library," or some other means to induce the customers to visit the store. If the title should be selected from a list mailed out to customers, perhaps they would not make another choice; but if they can be induced to visit the store and see the books, it is quite likely that some other book would attract their fancy, and possibly sales in other lines would also be made.

REWARDS OF LITERATURE.

THERE is one very considerable portion of the British people, said the Nation, recently, editorially, for whom the question of minimum-wage legislation must possess peculiar interest. The condition of the large body of men and women who are engaged in the production of novels that do not sell very well, if the subject were only brought up in Parliament, would stir public sympathy quite as powerfully as the case of the coal miners or the railway workers has done. What Parliament would be facing is not a problem, but a mystery. The question how a mine worker can live and bring up a family on his meager wages is a problem. The question how a minor novelist lives is a mystery. One minor novelist has just recounted his experiences in the National Review. It is a brief, matter-of-fact record of thirteen years' hard labor at the writing game, involving an output of fourteen published novels, three unpublished novels, and a volume of sketches, and showing a gross profit of £646, or a little less than two hundred and fifty dollars a year. This author now announces his intention of giving up literature and setting up as driver of a taxi-cab; a position, it may be remarked, for which he should be eminently qualified. Any man who has been able to steer his way through life for thirteen years on five dollars a week should find no difficulty in threading a taxicab through the most congested traffic in Piccadilly. It is true that in some quarters this confession by the writer in the National Review has been characterized as unduly pessimistic. Another minor novelist has written a reply, in which he shows that in the last nine years he has written eight novels and made an average profit of a thousand dollars a book, thus lifting himself by strenuous effort to the economic level of a motorman or an assistant bookkeeper.

Patriotic Americans will note with pride a striking difference between this country and England in the matter of literary "confessions." In England the magazines print the confessions of novelists who do not sell. In this country the magazines print the confessions of best-sellers. The difference cannot be explained simply on the ground of differences in national temperament. It may be that as a people we know how to take our medicine better than the Englishmen do. If an American writer's books refuse to sell, he either drops out of the "game" or else sticks to the game without making a fuss about it. Our characteristic optimism induces us to lay emphasis on the men who have "arrived." Nevertheless, the preponderance of cheerful confessions over the other kind must be accepted as proving that the rewards of authorship in this country are much higher than abroad and are much more generally diffused. But the interesting question is, Just how much better paid are our novelists than their fellow craftsmen abroad, and does even our higher average of pay supply the members of the profession, as a whole, with a living wage? A careful study of several recent human documents in this field leads one to the conclusion that, even in this country, which proudly counts a dozen men who ask a thousand dollars for a short story, and which produces every season a half-dozen novels that sell by the hundreds of thousands, the fiction business hardly pays.

We mean that it hardly pays when you consider the mental, physical and moral effort that goes towards the attainment of success. There are instances, of course, where writers have succeeded in hitting the bull's eye with a first or second book. But from the published confessions, as a whole, it is plain that, to the average "best-seller," success comes only after years of hard work, discouragement, and, what is most important of all, disenchantment. And here our native writers are at one with the Englishmen. The American producer of best-sellers is at pains to show that he has no illusions with regard to his work. Commercial success is the only thing he claims to have achieved. He did not nourish artistic ideals in those far-off days when the high price of beef was a much less vexing problem to him than the high cost of postage stamps. To-day he is engaged in giving the public what it wants. Now and then a novelist will venture to argue that writing the kind of literature the public wants is not a very degrading occupation, after all, but even this writer will seldom pretend that he enjoys doing it. So we still face the question why men will go on writing books which they do not regard as worth while, when the same amount of labor, persistence and brains would be sure to bring them much higher rewards in any other line of business. Suppose there are a dozen writers in this country to-day who get a thousand dollars for a short story, and earn twenty-five thousand dollars a year. What other profession or calling is there whose twelve most successful practitioners, in a nation of one hundred millions, must be content with so modest an income?

The only profession that is worse paid than literature is the ministry. The number of clergymen in the United States who receive even half of twenty-five thousand dollars may be counted upon the fingers of one hand. But, then, the minister does enjoy those non-monetary compensations which the writer of best-sellers expressly has sacrificed. Joy in creative effort, joy in one's mission, the good opinion of one's fellow workers—all these, according to our printed confessions, the successful novelist has thrown overboard. The writer in the National Review defines a minor novelist as one whose books average a sale of two thousand copies. If these two thousand copies were "The Egoist" or "What Maisie Knew," the problem would be a simple one. But our writer tells us that he was not engaged in turning out masterpieces, but pot-boilers; and what is the use of writing pot-boilers that do not even serve to make the pot boil? The case of our own best-sellers is essentially the same. It is true they do keep the pot boiling, with something over for dessert, and even an occasional motor car and a house in the country. Only the motor cars and the bungalows could be more easily and more plentifully earned if our writers gave up literature for business. There, at least, one finds the opportunity for doing honest work. Business men do not work with their tongue in their cheek, in order to make a handsome income. They do not have to say to themselves: "I could turn out a very superior brand of soap, but if the public wants bad soap, I give the public what it wants."

CATCHWORDING VERSUS SUBJECT CATALOGUING.

IN a notice of the United States Catalog, printed in the issue of the Publishers' Circular for January 11, 1913, says the March number of the Cumulative Book Index, an editorial note comments on the system of giving author, subject and title entries in one alphabet, and claims that the English Catalogue of Books deserves the credit for inaugurating this system. The Publishers' Circular evidently sees no difference between its own method and that of the United States Catalog. We fail, however, to find anything in the English Catalogue that corresponds to the subject entries in the United States Catalog. One may venture a guess that the Publishers' Circular looks upon title entries, particularly in inverted form, as substitutes for subject entries. This we maintain is unjustifiable.

There are at least five reasons why title entries cannot be substitutes for subject entries.

(1) Many titles give scarcely a hint of the subjects of their respective books. Anyone who wishes to take the trouble might easily compile, perhaps from memory, a long list of such titles. "Crown of Wild Olive," "Ethics of the Dust," "Pardoner's Wallet," "Sweetness and Light," "Holding the Ropes," "Ginger Talks," "Fate of Ictidorum," "Under the Plantain Leaf" are examples of this class.

(2) Even the titles that are presumably descriptive are in most cases so indefinite that it is usually impossible, however the title may be inverted or perverted, to give it a form that will serve as a subject entry. "Indian boys" might be a book about boys from India or American aborigines. It might be biography, travel, fiction or education. In a catalogue that has a right to be called a subject catalogue this entry would be found under India—Biography; India—Education; India—Social life and customs, or under the proper subdivision of Indians as the case might be. "Valuation tables" is a title which may tell in a general way the contents of the book. It does not tell you that it is a book on insurance, much less that it is a book on life insurance. The cataloguer who aims to give a subject classification spends much time and labor in discovering not only the subject of the book, but the particular division or phase of the subject treated. The title "Economic Prejudices" is a fairly descriptive title, and the title under Economic is of course of value. Let the book have a title entry by all means. A good subject catalogue, however, will also bring out the information that the book contains some discussion of free trade and protection. More than that, it will point out further which side of the question the author supports; if it is free trade the book will be listed under Free trade and protection, subdivision Free trade. This often requires much research on the part of the cataloguer.

(3) Although the title may reveal the subject of a book it may be so worded that the title entry will be useless as a subject guide. "Scarlet Mother on the Tiber" is no doubt a euphuistic title for Roman Catholic church. Neither does it need any particular acumen in this case to discover from the title that the book is from the Protestant point of view. But a title entry is altogether inadequate. Who would look under Scarlet for something about the Roman Catholic church? The subject cataloguer, however, not only gives it an entry under Scarlet but also under Roman Catholic church, subdivision Doctrinal and controversial works—Protestant authors. While one may guess that "365 Foreign Dishes" is a cook book, no one will look under the numeral or under Foreign or under Dishes for books on cookery. It is impossible to convert such a title into a subject entry.

(4) Most subjects are called by more than one name, and since titles are by no means uniform in their vocabularies it happens that even in the cases of those books whose contents are definitely stated in their titles, the title entries are inadequate substitutes for subject entries, because they are more than likely to be scattered through various letters of the alphabet, and the searcher is at a loss where to look for his material. For instance, the subject of temperance may be treated in much the same way in books whose titles variously name the subject as Temperance, Intemperance, Inebriety, Drunkenness, Liquor habit, Intoxication, and perhaps Alcoholism. All the books on this subject would not be brought together in the alphabet in one place, but would be scattered who knows where. Alphabetical position often varies considerably, also accordingly as a singular or plural form of a word is used, or a substantive or adjectival form or one or the other of two accepted spellings, e.g., Cat, Cats; Tooth, Teeth; Law, Legal; Gypsy, Gipsy; Rhyme, Rime.

(5) Not only are title entries entirely inadequate as substitutes for subject entries, but they are very often positively misleading and therefore worse than useless as subject references. "Behind the Scenes" and "Under the Footlights" might well be books on acting, but they are on Baptist faith and practice. "Pickling" might easily be mistaken for a book on cookery, unless one happened to know that the author was interested in metallurgy. "Tramp's Handbook" actually found a place under the subject heading Tramps in a certain catalogue. It is of course a book on outdoor life for perfectly respectable people. "Annals of the Irish Harpers" and "House of Harper" might well puzzle and mislead a genealogist in search of additions to his library. Any one interested in labor conditions would scarcely order a book entitled "Arcady," yet if he did he would find something of interest to him. He might very probably order a book entitled "Ancient Labor," in which case he would receive a surprise. Neither would "Wealth and Workmen" be of use to him, since it is a book on missions. "Whole Hog Book" is a title which might designate an exhaustive treatise on swine, but it is in fact a delicate and tactful allusion to the Protectionist. "Hints to Fishermen" is not a book on angling, but on evangelistic work. "Tenants of an Old Farm" refers neither to the two-legged nor to the four-legged occupants of the farm, but to the six-legged ones. Who indeed would look for something on insects under Tenants or even under Farm, should the title be jiu-jitsued into Farm, Tenants of an Old. Who would look for something on Protection under "Whole" or under "Hog"? Who would expect to find a book on laboring classes listed under Arcady, and what chagrin the economist might suffer in sending for a book listed under Labor, Ancient, only to find that it was a discussion of obstetrics.

But lest we be accused of selecting exceptional titles to prove our point, we will make a comparison of the two methods of cataloguing as illustrated by two or three subjects in the English Catalogue of Books, 1901-1905, and the United States Catalog Supplement, 1902-1905. The English Catalogue covers five years, while the United States Catalog Supplement covers four, yet the former has only 18 entries of titles beginning Geology and Geological while the latter has 81 entries under the subject heading Geology. The English catalogue has 28 titles beginning Missionaries, Missionary, Missions, while the United States Catalog Supplement has 147 entries under the subject heading Missions, 19 entries under the heading Missionaries, and 12 title entries beginning Missionary. The United States Catalog Supplement has, therefore, a total of 178 entries to assist a searcher to find what he wants on missions as against 29 entries in the English catalogue. Moreover, the list in the United States Catalog Supplement is subdivided so as to show at a glance, not only all the books on missions listed in the catalogue, but also the particular countries covered. These are well defined subjects in which the titles are more likely to be descriptive than in many others and in which the same terminology is used in England and America. They are fair examples.

Church of England is also a well defined subject, having an official name. It offers a fair test of the truth of what we have been saying. There are only 12 entries under Church of England in the English Catalogue as against 91 in the United States Catalog Supplement. Since of these 12, five are for five annual numbers of the official year books, it would be more accurate to say that the English catalogue has 8 entries under this subject, or less than 9 per cent. of the material in the United States Catalog Supplement. It should be borne in mind, too, that more books are doubtless published in England on this subject than in America, and that the English Catalogue covers a longer period by one year than the United States Catalog Supplement.

It is probably not because the English Catalogue contains fewer books on the subject than the United States Catalog Supplement that it makes so poor a showing, but because it does not collect its material under subject headings and one does not know therefore where to find it. (1) There are some titles no doubt which give no clue that the books are about the Church of England, like "Whither Goest Thou." (2) There are other titles so indefinitely stated that there is no subject word from which to make a title-subject entry, e.g., Rome and Reunion. One does not look under Rome to find something about the Church of England, but the book is written from an Anglican point of view and should be listed under Church of England. (3) Some titles that mention the subject specifically do not lend themselves to inversion so that the subject word may be put first, e.g., Papers on the Doctrine of the English Church Concerning the Eucharistic Presence. In fact we cannot find that the English Catalogue has given inverted title entries to such titles as Conflict of Ideals in the English Church or Opportunity of the Church of England. The only entries besides the author entries for these books seem to be under Conflict (shortened to Conflict of Ideals) and under Opportunity. (4) Even those few titles which by chance or some special dispensation of Providence are so worded as to save from utter absurdity the title-subject plan of the English Catalogue, vary so much in the name they use for the Church of England that one has to search in many places for the material, i.e., under Church of England, English church (sometimes inverted to Church, English, and sometimes not) under Anglican church and other titles beginning Anglican, and through many titles beginning Church, some of which are about the Church of England and some not. The cataloguer has left it to the user of the catalog to find out what particular church is meant. The difficulty is still further increased by the inconsistency of the catalogue in following its inconsistent plan. One cannot tell whether to look for a title "English Church History" under Church, English, Church history, English, or under English church history. (5) Some of the titles under this subject are, moreover, misleading. In the 1906 English Catalogue we find the title Catholic faith. If this title is to be called a subject entry, we do not hesitate to say that it is worse than no entry at all because it is misleading. It is not a book on what is popularly known as the Catholic church, nor on the faith universal, but on the faith of the Church of England.

Out of the 234 entries in the United States Catalog under Church of England only 51 titles are so worded that they would be likely to receive title entries under Church, English, or English church or Anglican under the English method. Many of the titles concerning which there might be doubt, we took the pains to search for in the English Catalogue. If our figures are wrong, it is because the titles were so decapitated or detruncated in the cataloguing that they were unidentifiable. It is indeed true that many of this saving remnant of 51 title would appear in the English Catalogue in so abbreviated a form that were the author entries eliminated, the catalogue would not be a good title index—much less a subject catalogue.

As to the pioneer in the field of dictionary cataloguing, we do not know to whom the honor belongs. In trade bibliography it is our opinion that the Cumulative Book Index made the first attempt in 1898.

MEETING IN MEMORY OF DR. BILLINGS.

MORE than four hundred persons attended the memorial meeting held in the New York Public Library on April 25, in honor of John Shaw Billings, who was a director of the institution.

John L. Cadwalader, LL.D., president of the New York Public Library, presided, and after a prayer by Bishop Greer introduced Dr. S. Weir Mitchell. Dr. Mitchell characterized the lifework of Dr. Billings as remarkable, because of the value it held for the people. Sir William Osler, the second speaker, touched on the great index system that was founded by Dr. Billings. "His index of medical bibliography is an enduring monument to his fame," he said. Dr. William Welch spoke of Dr. Billings' connection with and help to the medical world.

Andrew Carnegie said of Dr. Billings: "His was a long and arduous task resolutely performed from beginning to end, and for man's elevation and advancement. . . After continual advancement, Dr. Billings stood foremost in his wide domain, his crowning service being rendered to this magnificent library in which we now stand, and which must ever be associated with his genius."

R. R. Bowker, editor of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, was the last speaker. He brought the tribute of the American Library Association, the New York Library Club and the New York State Library Association, as well as the homage of the entire library profession to the memory of Dr. Billings and his work. He spoke of Dr. Billings' work in the New York Public Library, and told several stories indicating his personality and his humorous nature.

BOOK FAIR TO BE HELD IN JUNE.

FROM inquiries received at this office, it seems that many are not aware that the date of the Chicago Book Fair has been changed from July to June, as noted in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY of April 12. There were a number of objections to holding the meeting in July, namely, the celebration of the national holiday, the extreme heat of the month, and the interference with the vacation period; therefore the Book Fair for this year will open in Chicago on June 16.

COPYRIGHT MATTERS.

NEW ADHESIONS TO BUENOS AYRES CONVENTION.

THE Department of State has received word that the Fourth Pan-American Copyright Convention (Buenos Ayres, 1910) was approved by Panama on March 13 last. Honduras ratified the convention on January 30, the Dominican Republic and Guatemala having already ratified it.

TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

AMERICAN BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION.

THE following is the complete programme of the thirteenth annual convention of the American Booksellers' Association, Hotel Astor, New York City, May 12 to 15:

"This," says the programme committee, John G. Kidd, C. C. Shoemaker, F. G. Melcher, L. A. Keating and T. E. Schulte, "is to be an optimistic convention, with all the energy directed toward devising means for selling more books. No one in the book business, no matter how remote from New York, can fail to be repaid ten times over for the expense of the trip. In point of fact, it is not an expense, but an asset which will be immediately available in increased efficiency."

MONDAY, MAY 12.

8.00 p.m. Reception to the president and executive committee.

TUESDAY, MAY 13.

9.00 a.m. Opening of the convention and address of welcome by the president, Walter L. Butler.

9.40 a.m. Business session. Reports of all the committees, etc.

10.20 a.m. "The Booksellers' Responsibility." Miss Virginia S. Cowper, of Wanamaker's, New York.

11.00 a.m. "Agencies for Developing Reading." Louis A. Keating, of the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia.

11.40 a.m. "Books and Their Competitors." Alfred Harcourt, of Henry Holt & Company, New York.

12.30 p.m. Adjournment.

2.00 p.m. "The Problem of Bookselling in the Smaller Cities." John Sterling, Watertown, N. Y.

2.40 p.m. "More Steps Forward." William H. Arnold, of the Syndicate Trading Company and the H. B. Claflin Company, New York.

3.20 p.m. "Overproduction: A Menace to the Book Trade." Vernor M. Schenck, of Johnson's Bookstore, Springfield, Mass.

4.00 p.m. "Book Conditions in the Northwest." Will D. Wilson, of the Lowman & Hanford Company, Seattle, Wash.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14.

9.30 a.m. "Co-operation Between the Library and the Bookstore." George F. Bowerman, Librarian of Public Library of the District of Columbia, Washington.

10.10 a.m. "Library Trade for the Local Dealer." John L. Grant, Utica, N. Y.

11.00 a.m. "Fine Books as an Adjunct." Ernest Dressel North, New York.

11.40 a.m. "School Book Business; Its Possibilities and Perils." W. R. Barnes, president the C. M. Barnes-Wilcox Co., Chicago, Ill.

12.30 p.m. Adjournment.

2.00 p.m. "The Menace of the Reprints." Christopher G. Grauer, of the Otto Ulbrich Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

2.40 p.m. "The Revival of the Religious Trade." George W. Brazer, of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, New York.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Theatre party. Full particulars will be announced at the first session.

THURSDAY, MAY 15.

9.30 a.m. Executive session for the members of the American Booksellers' Association only. Discussion of all matters of importance that may be brought before the convention. Also plans arranged for 1914 convention, reports of special committees, election of officers, etc.

1.00 p.m. Adjournment to Charles Scribner's Son's new store on upper Fifth Avenue, where a buffet lunch will be served by that firm, immediately followed with short speeches by authors and members of the firm. The association will then be taken by automobile to the Scribner's manufacturing plant.

3.30 p.m. Unfinished business from the morning session will be transacted.

6.30 p.m. Reception at the Hotel Astor.

7.00 p.m. Dinner at Hotel Astor.

It is unnecessary to say that the 1913 banquet will by far exceed any before given, but this is a fact, nevertheless. Among the speakers are Percy Mackaye, Tom Daly, Irvin Cobb and the Honorable George McAneny.

The greatest care has been exercised in handling all details, such as menus, souvenirs, decorations, etc.

THE BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

THE April lecture in the Booksellers' League's series of trade lectures for book clerks was by Lawrence O. Gomme, of the firm of Vaughan & Gomme, proprietors of the "Little Book Store Around the Corner," on 29th Street, near Fifth Avenue, started four years ago by Mitchell Kennerley. "Our First Year in Business," Mr. Gomme's title, gives the trend of his talk, a statement of the ideal behind the Little Book Store, and a resumé of progress so far made. Mr. Gomme's paper was supplemented by one from his partner, Mr. Vaughan. The Little Store aims at personal contact with all its patrons. Its proprietors aim to know personally all the most worth-while current publications of serious importance, and to recommend nothing with which they are not personally familiar. Fiction, the standby of the average bookseller, does not loom large in their scheme. Their aim is to buy closely (Mr. Gomme follows the suggestive plan of buying "for stock" each month in amount not to exceed the cash sales for the preceding month), to have a small stock, but a broadly varied one, and never to buy simply "to get a discount."

Mr. Gomme explained the reputation of his store for specializing in drama and sociology by saying that it aimed to get the newest thought of the day; and that to-day people of brains were expressing themselves pre-eminently in books of the types named. He admitted quite cheerfully that the store's profits for its first year would, after paying salaries to its proprietors, probably not be large; but he added that neither could the loss, if any, be large; and that gross business was steadily increasing.

PERSONAL NOTES.

THE John Lane Co. announced that Ernest Richers has been appointed sales manager of their book department.

A DECREE of divorce was granted this week in favor of Mrs. Helen Hertberg Kaufman against Herbert Kaufman, editor of The Woman's World and author of several volumes of poetry and essays.

MRS. CRAIG LIPPINCOTT'S $1000 gold ornaments, left by her in a wheel-chair on the Atlantic City boardwalk last Monday, were discovered later in the day in the furnace of a paving company. The framework of a gold purse which held the jewels was found among the clinkers, minus about $135 in cash, but with some of the jewels still intact. The chair-pusher's confession brought about the search of the ashes, which revealed the ornaments.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

ADMIRAL MAHAN'S book on the naval tactics of the Revolutionary War, announced for early publication, has been postponed until autumn.

DUFFIELD & COMPANY are issuing a novelization of "The Conspiracy," by Robert Baker and John Emerson, founded upon the play of the same name.

ANDRE TRIDON'S forthcoming book, "The New Unionism," which will be published by B. W. Huebsch, deals with the philosophy and practice of Syndicalism and its various manifestations in different lands.

CASELL & Co. will publish, on April 24, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace's "Social Environment and Moral Progress," a scientist's solution of a great human question. Dr. Wallace has just passed his ninetieth birthday.

"THE WHIP," with its dash and thrills, and "Romance," with its touching love story, are among the most successful of New York's plays of the season. Novelizations of both are published by the Macaulay Company.

DESMOND FITZGERALD, INC., announces "Out of the North," a collection of Arctic poems, by Howard V. Sutherland, with a foreword by the late Joaquin Miller. The book will contain a rare photograph of Miller, taken in Dawson.

"THE HEART: Its Care and Cure, and the General Management of the Body," is the full title of a new work by Dr. I. H. Hirschfeld, from the Press of Funk & Wagnalls Company. It was prepared especially for popular reading, and to serve as an easy guide in the prevention of disease.

A MERRY tale of complications, all about a young millionaire (in disguise, of course) and his mother's charming housekeeper, is to be found in "The Upper Crust," by Charles Sherman, author of "He Comes Up Smiling."

It is published to-day by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. Coles Phillips and Arthur William Brown are the illustrators.

A PECULIAR interest attaches to a forthcoming book, "The Bugles of Gettysburg," by La Salle Corbell Pickett, to be published May 17 by F. G. Browne & Co., Chicago. Mrs. Pickett is the widow of General George E. Pickett, of Gettysburg fame. She has written for the fiftieth anniversary of the battle a pretty romance, with the battle as a heroic climax.

ETHEL M. DELL'S "The Knave of Diamonds" is published to-day by Putnam. The interest centers about a man of peculiar personality, who proves something of a problem to the woman he loves. England's best, socially, people the story, except for an American family of corresponding class. The story has something of the spirit of Mrs. Barclay's works.

"MIKKY," the little newsboy, hero of "Lo, Michael!" by Grace L. H. Lutz, saves the life of Starr, baby daughter of a millionaire banker. His subsequent rise to power through the banker's help brings about a situation in which the problems of class prejudice are developed. The story has no socialistic motive. The Lippincotts promise the book for early May.

COINCIDENT with the issuing of a new edition of "The Broad Highway," with a colored frontispiece by Charles E. Brock, the American publishers of Jeffery Farnol state that they have now received Mr. Farnol's own dramatization of that popular novel. Arrangements will be made for the stage production of "The Broad Highway" in the autumn.

RALPH STOCK, son of the well-known London bookseller, Elliot Stock, has written a true and unvarnished account of his world wanderings in "The Confessions of a Tenderfoot," which Henry Holt & Company will issue May 10. Mr. Stock tells of his experiences in the Canadian Northwest, the lumber camps of the western United States, and the South Sea Islands.

WHY did Varge take upon his shoulders the guilt of a man he did not love? This is the problem of Frank L. Packard's "Greater Love Hath No Man." Judge and jury are obliged to condemn Varge on his own confession; he endures the penitentiary stolidly, then—love enters, and barriers are broken. The novel has just come from the George H. Doran Co.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY announce the following books to be brought out May 17: "Stowe Notes," by Edward Martin Taber; "A History of Lexington, Massachusetts," by Charles Hudson; "Michelangelo," by Robert W. Carden; "The Youth of Henry VIII.," by Frank J. Mumby; a new illustrated edition of Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn"; and "Time and the Woman," by Richard Pryce.

THE employees of Thomas Nelson & Sons, with the hearty co-operation of the firm, have organized a baseball team for the season of 1913. Emerson Field, at 207th Street and Tenth Avenue, New York, has been engaged for Saturdays, and match games with other uniformed teams in the publishing business can be arranged. Address William T. Dickerson, manager, care of Thomas Nelson & Sons, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

PROFESSOR BRANDER MATTHEWS'S "The Development of the Drama," which has become in its field a standard work in America, has been translated into Japanese by Kichizo Nakamura, and was published in Tokyo in January, 1913. A new book by Brander Matthews will be published by the Scribners in the fall—"Shakespeare as a Playwright"—which is partly biographical, but is primarily a study of Shakespeare's stagecraft.

BIOGRAPHICAL works on two of America's greatest fighters are just published by Scribner: "The Life and Letters of General Meade," who won the battle of Gettysburg, appropriately appearing only a few weeks before the fiftieth anniversary of that victory; and "The Life and Letters of John Paul Jones," by Mrs. Reginald de Koven, which sweeps aside some of the mysteries which have always blurred the vision of that picturesque seaman.

BISHOP BREWSTER, of Connecticut, has just published, through Thomas Whittaker, Inc., a volume of lectures, entitled, "The Kingdom of God and American Life." It is an effort to adjust the Christian ideal with the standards of democracy, aiming at the practical rule of principle, and not the inactivity of sentiment. The same publishers announce a new edition of "The Episcopal Church," by the Rev. George Hodges, D.D., Dean of Cambridge.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Doubleday, Page & Co. that they will publish, early this spring, one of the first books on the new schools of art which are variously called Post-impressionism, Futurism, the School of Cubists, etc. It is "The New Tendency in Art," by Henry R. Poore, and while it is a little book, it contains an exhaustive discussion of the aims, principles and meaning behind the much-discussed followers of Matisse, Picabia and others.

A PROBLEM which concerns every person in almost every country is discussed in a book on the Lippincott's spring list—"The Reduction of Domestic Flies," by Edward H. Ross, of London. This book is intended to describe the nature of the insect known as the house-fly—its life, its danger to human beings, and the part it plays in causing sickness, death and misery; and to show how this pest may be best reduced in its number, so that its dangerous influence may be lessened.

THE use of color comic pages in the Sunday Philadelphia Public Ledger has been discontinued. In its issue of Saturday, April 12, the paper says: "It was concluded that the subject matter and treatment of the comic illustrated serials exercise a mischievous influence on boys and girls, and have demoralizing tendencies." The Public Ledger states that it intends to eliminate journalistic "vaudeville." This paper was recently purchased by Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, whose "The Big League" and "The Ten-thousand Dollar Arm" made a hit in baseball literature, has out more tales of the Big League, just when baseball enthusiasm is ready to rise again, under the title, "The Lucky Seventh." He has also written "Within the Ropes," a story of prize-fighting. Both are Small, Maynard publications. The same house has just published "A Modern Pilgrim in Mecca and A Siege in Sanaa," by A. J. B. Wavell, the story of an unusual journey.

"ANIMAL PORTRAITURE," by Wilhelm Kuhnert and R. Lydekker (Warne), is a folio volume, containing fifty full-page color plates, reproduced from paintings of animal life by Wilhelm Kuhnert, one of the greatest living animal painters. From the Polar bear of the Arctic to the silver gull of a summer sea, every type of wild life is portrayed in its native surroundings. R. Lydekker's descriptions, which accompany the illustrations, are neither technical nor above the average admirer of outdoor life and big-game sport.

IN view of the contemplated publication by the government of the Revolutionary records, effort is being made to collect all military records which may bear upon the subject. State Librarian Godard, of Connecticut, is sending out a request that any persons having in their custody or knowing of the location of any records, correspondence or other papers which will assist the Secretary of War in completing the proposed compilation will communicate with State Librarian George S. Godard, Hartford, Conn., at their earliest convenience.

WHILE not exactly the first book in its field, J. M. Robertson's "The Baconian Heresy" presents the Bacon-Shakespeare question so lucidly and thoroughly that it may well be the last. This volume, refuting the "persistent myth," is just published by Dutton. Evelyn Underhill's "The Mystic Way" comes from the same house. The type of life called mystical is traced out, leading to a discussion of the life of St. Paul and an attempt to reconstruct the inner life of Christ from the testimony of the Evangelists.

A NEW educational series, The Little Cousins of Long Ago Series, is to be published by L. C. Page. The initial volume is "Our Little Roman Cousin of Long Ago," being the story of Marcus, a boy of Rome, by Julia Darrow Cowles. The publishers promise that the new series will be historically accurate as well as interesting to the child, and will resemble in format and appearance the established Little Cousin Series. "Our Little Athenian Cousin of Long Ago," "Our Little Viking Cousin of Long Ago," and "Our Little Spartan Cousin of Long Ago," and many other volumes are in preparation.

MOFFAT, YARD & COMPANY will shortly publish Edward Isaacson's "The New Morality," an interpretation of present social and economic forces and tendencies, published in England as "The Malthusian Limit." The writer's thesis is that present conditions and tendencies may divide mankind into two clearly recognized classes: the one reproductive and stable, with the family as unit; and the other childless, with the individual as unit and with his energies freed for better adjusted activities in other directions. "Out of the Ashes," a forthcoming Moffat, Yard novel, is a story of New York idealistic in spirit.

A WORK of importance to all students of religion and philosophy and to the general reader who keeps abreast with progress in these fields, is Dr. Josiah Royce's "The Problem of Christianity," to be published May 7 in two volumes, the first, "The Christian Doctrine of Life," and the second, "The Real World and the Christian Ideas." S. C. Nethersole's story of life in southern England, with the somewhat elusive title, "Wilsam," is to be published by Macmillan on the same date. The title is an old Anglo-Saxon expression akin to the more familiar modern word "jetsam," for goods cast up by the sea.

AN aid to scientific housekeeping, in the form of a calendar, is to be issued by the new firm of Sully & Kleinteich. "The Dinner Calendar for 1914," by Fannie Merritt Farmer, author of "The Boston Cooking School Book," has been well taken care of on the art side—gold, blue and green printing, border designs, box, tassel and all—and is, moreover, of practical value in that it gives 365 original menus and the same number of original recipes, appropriate for the day and season. Kipling and Stevenson calendars, and one with quotations from Mrs. Wiggins' "Rebecca," are also promised. All will be ready by September 1.

ONE of the most important of Dodd, Mead & Company's spring publications is "Alaska, An Empire in the Making," by J. J. Underwood, announced for May 3. Mr. Underwood is a well-known newspaper man and writer of Seattle, Wash., who spent many years in Alaska earning his living as a pioneer and a practical miner. At one time he founded and published the farthest north newspaper in the world—the Council City News, which sold at twenty-five cents a copy, with ivory, furs and golddust as acceptable mediums of exchange. His book is no dull recital of facts; it is a gripping story.

THE centenary of the birth of the great African explorer, David Livingstone, has aroused a lively interest in recent African explorations. One of the most noteworthy has been that of E. Torday, whose experiences and adventures are set forth in his new book, "Camp and Tramp in African Wilds" (Lippincotts). The fact, also, that Mr. Torday traveled over the same route taken by the great Livingstone makes this account of unique interest. The Congo natives are usually pictured by explorers and hunters as ferocious and treacherous savages, but Mr.

Torday found that this was gross misrepresentation. He traveled all through the Congo region unarmed, except when hunting for big game. He found that the savages quickly responded in kind to fair and just treatment.

THE first of the series of four books on social hygiene, which the Century Co. is to publish in the near future, under the auspices of the Bureau of Social Hygiene, will deal with "Commercialized Prostitution in New York City." The book is the work of George J. Kneeland, chief investigator for the Chicago Vice Commission and author of that commission's report, and is the product of the investigation conducted in New York City by Mr. Kneeland and a staff of expert assistants working from June to November, 1912. John D. Rockefeller Jr., chairman of the Bureau of Social Hygiene, has written the introduction to the book, which is scheduled for publication May 15; and there will be a supplementary chapter by Miss Katherine Bement Davis, superintendent of the New York State Reformatory for Women.

LONG used to prop a bureau that in days now distant had lost a caster, a book brought $2000 to two aged women and joy to the heart of a collector of old volumes, who announced, a week ago Monday, that another "first edition" of Edgar Allan Poe's second work, "Al Aaraaf," had been found at Washington, D. C. The women, a mother and daughter, had called John T. Loomis, a second-hand bookdealer, to their rooms to look over a small library they possessed. The offering did not attract the man, and he was leaving when he saw a cardboard-bound volume under the edge of the bureau. "What is this?" he said, stooping. "That's nothing," said the daughter. "It's by Mr. Poe. He used to call on Adeline and Alvina Wolfe, two women who lived in Baltimore, and he gave it to them. It fell very flat when it was published." Loomis, who could have had the book virtually for nothing, gave the women $2000, and another bureau prop was substituted. A first edition copy of the work recently brought $2700 at auction.

BUSINESS NOTES.

GRAND HAVEN, MICH.—John H. Reichardt, of the Reichardt Book Shop, has just returned from a five-weeks' cruise in the West Indies, touching the coast of South America, and traveling over the Panama Canal route.

NEW YORK CITY.—Harry M. Levingston is suing the Lamb Publishing Co. for $26,000, the difference between $36,000 which he paid for a collection of books, and $10,000 which he claims is their actual value. He asserts that James Plunkett, an agent of the company, posing as a government expert, induced him to buy the books in May, 1911. George Edwin Joseph, counsel for the Lamb Publishing Co., said that the library for which Levingston paid $36,000 was composed entirely of rare volumes, each of which has a standing in the book world. "It was Mr. Lichtenstein's personal library, which took over twenty years for him to get together."

NEW YORK CITY.—John Wiley & Sons have removed from 43 East 19th street to 432 Fourth Avenue, corner of 29th street. The Excelsior Publishing House is now at 470 Fourth Avenue, corner of 32d Street.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The St. Louis Depository, of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, will move from 505 North Seventh Street, eighth floor, to 313 North Tenth Street, second floor. The new store will be furnished throughout with new fixtures, and will be considerably larger than the store they now occupy.

AUCTION SALES.

MAY 6, 2:30 AND 8:15 P.M. Oil paintings, fine furniture, bric-a-brac, etc., gathered by the well-known American poet, the late Will Carlton, and others. (325 lots.)—Merwin.

MAY 6, 7 AND 8, 8:15 P.M. Prints from private collections, including selections from the portfolios of the late Henry M. Field, of New York. (630 lots.)—Anderson.

MAY 13 AND 14, 2:30 P.M. Library of Judge Edgar J. Lauer, of New York, and books from other private sources; an interesting collection which includes bibliophile and Grolier Club, etc. (No. 532.)—Anderson.

PICK-UPS.

TALK BUSINESS.

Don't take up all the valuable time during which you are waiting on customers in talking about the weather. Make use of your time. Introduce some real business into your talk. It will be more to your advantage to say, "We have just received the very newest idea in papers," than to talk on meteorological reports.

Your customer has already heard all about the weather in other stores, and it will be a relief to her nerves to have someone introduce something else.—Canadian Bookseller and Stationer.

MARVELLOUSLY CONDENSED.

A LAWYER of the good old Southern type had argued for three court days without pause. His brief was a masterpiece of classical learning and legal erudition, but it was tiresome.

"Colonel Parker," said the wearied judge at last, "without wishing to intimate in any way that the court would not be delighted to listen to your whole argument, I suggest that the docket is somewhat crowded, and that if you could condense a little, it might help your client's cause."

The attorney smiled his acknowledgment. "Your Honor," he exclaimed, "the thought was in my mind when I prepared my argument! Suh, for the next four days my brief is a perfect marvel of condensation!"

MAKING A SLOT MACHINE OF YOURSELF.

BEEN a long time on your present job, and you haven't had a raise for years; well, will you let us butt in to suggest a few reasons as to why you haven't?

You have never made a move to improve the arrangement of the stock in your department, unless the boss told you.

You have never made even a suggestion, in all the years that you have been with the house, how to increase the business by some original plan thought out in your own noddle.

You have never made it your business to suggest other books to your customer after he has purchased what he inquired for.

Your attitude during business hours is that of one who has no real lively interest in the job that furnishes you with your eats.

In other words, you are a dummy!

The boss could put in a slot machine that could sell as many books as you do.

So, that "raise" is really up to you, and you will get it as soon as you show some signs of life and activity, and convince the boss that you are not an inanimate slot machine.—L. M. CROSS, in the Vir Publishing Company's "Successful Selling."

Brace, Harrison H. The value of organized speculation. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. c. 12+290 p. tabs., O. (Hart, Schaffner and Marx prize essays in economics.) $1.50 n.

Study of speculation upon the exchanges, presenting both advantages and disadvantages in order that the net value of organized speculation as an economic and social factor may be truly estimated. It is held that the ever-varying factors act and react upon one another in great complexity, causing the numerous changes in price. Besides the direct effect upon prices, indirect effects are considered, such, for instance, as the facilities for hedging afforded by the speculative markets. In a chapter on Moral and social value, the fact that speculation ministers to the passion for gambling is given due weight. Index.

Dell, Ethel May. The knave of diamonds. N. Y., Putnam. c. 534 p. front. D. $1.35 n.

By author of "The way of an eagle." Story deals with the moral development of a man whose volcanic temperament is the outcome of mixed blood, American and Indian. Nap Errol knows but one restraint, his love for his invalid half-brother, and his wild nature makes him an object of dislike in the English country place they come to live in. He falls in love with Lady Carfax, whose drunken husband is lord of the manor. At first his passion is absolutely uncontrolled, but in a hard school he learns self-sacrifice and emerges worthy of the happiness he wins.

Goad, Harold Elsdale. The kingdom. N. Y., Stokes. c. 336 p. D. $1.25 n.

A man about to marry the girl he loves finds that she loves his friend. Naturally inclined to a religious life and feeling his trouble as a final call from God, he becomes a Franciscan friar. Book is an analysis of the spiritual development of an introspective, deeply religious man. Bernardo struggles first against God, then against the world he has given up, and comes to final peace in the realization of his mission to teach the Church "to make her vision the most vital and creating force in the world to-day."

Graham, Stephen. Changing Russia; with 15 il. and a map. N. Y., J: Lane. 9+309 p. O. $2.50 n.

Describes a journey from Rostof-on-the-Don to Batum and a summer spent on the Ural Mountains. Author has traversed all the region which is to be developed by the new railway from Novo-rossisk to Poti. It is a tramping diary with notes and reflections. Book deals more with the commercial life of Russia than with that of the peasantry, and there are chapters on the Russia of the hour, the Russian town, life among the gold miners of the Urals, the bourgeois, Russian journalism, the intelligentsia, the election of the fourth Duma. Account is given of Russia at the seaside, and each of the watering places of the Black Sea shore is described in detail. Index.

Hugh Inskip, a prominent man of letters, marries a young wife, whom he does not understand, because she is continually posing and never her natural self. She is also jealous of the beautiful actress, Margaret Stair, for whom Inskip is writing a play, and makes use of an ingenious and shady trick to spy upon her husband's motives. But Iris, the wife, is not entirely a malignant figure—for her frail beauty and helplessness make an appeal for sympathy. Scene of the novel changes at times from the hub of London life to the peaceful quiet of a country vicarage, where the father of Iris lives.

Author in preface says: "We must after all come back to the logical consequence of the two propositions of Malthus; the human race can increase in geometrical ratio; and the food supply can increase only in arithmetical ratio. The whole race must face the problem of how to limit its members to the figures which can make the best use of the world's natural resources." Book will be interesting to those who are occupied with the study of eugenics and sociological problems.

- When Robert Gilmour, returning home late at night, is called upon to rescue beauty in distress and next day finds himself arrested for abduction, all his well-regulated ideas of life and conduct fall in ruins around him. For five days he lives in an atmosphere of escape, flight, pursuit, capture and again escape, and then he finds the maiden doesn't wish to be rescued any more. His thrilling romance is quite as shattered as his well-regulated life had been, and we leave him drawing a long breath and about to take up things where he dropped them, but with a difference.

Varge takes the guilt of a man he does not love on his shoulders, because the truth will bring unbearable sorrow upon the woman who has played a mother's part to him. Everyone believes him innocent, even the judge and jury who condemn him on his own confession. In the penitentiary it is the same, the rumor of his innocence is prevalent. He endures his punishment stolidly until love enters his life, then he breaks jail, is recaptured again, escapes, gives himself up, and is at last triumphantly vindicated.

- Returning to New York, after many years, John Curtis goes to a quiet hotel on 27th Street. He sees a man murdered just outside the door, but is too late to help. In the confusion he is given the dead man's coat, in which is a marriage license. He goes to tell the woman mentioned in it about the crime, and finds her a lovely girl who has paid the murdered man to marry her to escape the persecutions of her father and an unwelcome suitor. Curtis marries her and adventures begin the moment they leave the minister's. Each hour of the night brings a new thrill, involving political intrigue, fighting, flight, pursuit and capture in quick succession.

- Basis of paper "is the thought that the best development of social life is possible only where there is free play for individual activities, and that this free play for individual activities is denied equally by organized and unorganized invasion, the former condoned by the extreme governmentalist, the latter by the extreme individualist, and both by the careless and indifferent of all classes."

- "By author of "Socialism as it is." Deals with the intellectual and spiritual side of Socialism. Taking as the point of departure the philosophy of modern science, which he shows to be wholly socialistic in its bearings, and wholly dependent upon Socialism for its practical applications, author first shows what results are reached by approaching each of the subjects discussed from this new standpoint, and then points out how the Socialist movement is moving along the same line. Wavell, A. J. B. A modern pilgrim in Mecca and a siege in Sanaa. Bost., Small, Maynard. 9+343 p. pls. fold. map, O. $2.80 n.

Author is the only Englishman who has witnessed the fighting in the Yemen, the Turks preferring that world should not know what is happening there. For the last twenty years, while the Turks and Arabs have been struggling for the mastery, the history of the Yemen has been one of fire and sword, for the Turks in Arabia are as much foreign conquerors as are the British in India. It is a record of battles and sieges, places taken by storm and garrisons starved into surrender; of savage massacres and fierce reprisals. The campaign of 1911, with which this book deals, probably cost nearly as many lives as did the Boer War. Nor is the conflict over; it will be renewed and fought out to the end, for both sides mean to win. Index.

The above rates are for unspecified positions. Special rates for preferred position (full pages only).

Higher rates are charged for the Summer Reading, Educational Number and Christmas Bookshelf, and for the monthly Book Review supplement sections.

Advertising copy should reach us Tuesday noon—earlier, if proof is desired out-of-town. Forms close Thursday noon.

Under the heading "BOOKS WANTED" booktrade subscribers, under their own names, are given five nonpareil lines (exclusive of address) free advertisement for specific books out of print in any issue except special numbers, but not exceeding 100 lines a year. If over five lines are sent the excess is at 10 cents a line. Books not out of print, unspecified wants repeated matter, and all advertisements from nonsubscribers cost 10 cents a line. Objectionable books are excluded so far as they are noted.

In answering, please state edition, condition and price, including postage or express charges. Houses that will deal exclusively on a cash-on-delivery basis should put [Cash] after their firm name. The appearance of advertisements in this column, or elsewhere in the WEEKLY, does not furnish a guarantee of credit. While it endeavors to safeguard its columns by withholding the privilege of advertising should occasion arise, booksellers should take usual precautions in extending credit.

"Books Wanted" must be designated by actual title, not by "any."

Write your wants plainly, on one side of the sheet only. Illegible "wants" are ignored. The WEEKLY is not responsible for errors. Parties with whom there is no account must pay in advance.

Under "BOOKS FOR SALE" or for other small undisplayed advertisements, the charge is 10 cents a nonpareil line. No reduction for repeated matter. Count seven words to the line.

ADAM'S CLAY

COSMO HAMILTON

"ADAM'S CLAY" is not an ordinary novel; indeed, it is an extraordinary one. Mr. Hamilton has, of set purpose, chosen a special type of woman, and has painted her for us so that while she stands transfigured in her physical beauty, she is yet degraded in her soul. Betty Blundell is a creation in literature whose like may be found in Becky Sharp, but who has never been revealed to us so ruthlessly as now. She belongs essentially to the artificial life of to-day, but her ways are the old ways of the temptress "since summer first was leafy."

In Mr. Hamilton's story she is presented clothed in alluring dress and profoundly versed in the wiles of the heartless and soulless coquette; but she is presented not as an object to be courted or loved, or even admired; she is left with us to speak for herself, so that our own finer instincts may deal with her as she deserves.

Ready May 10th.

Why you should come to the Booksellers' Convention

May 13th, 14th and 15th

HOTEL ASTOR.
CONVENTION HEADQUARTERS.

YOU will do better work when you get back on the job if you will knock off for a few days to come to the Booksellers' Convention. Perhaps you will see your own business in a different light when you return. This often happens, and it has sometimes proven profitable.

Your brother booksellers will be at the Convention, and the exchange of ideas will do you both good.

New York is the publishing center. It is good business for you to come here and keep in touch with trade conditions.

Good speakers will make the program worth while. Vital trade subjects will be placed on the table and dissected for your benefit. Plan now to come.

N.B.—The date of the Banquet is

Thursday, May 15

As in former years, the price of tickets is $3.50, and the treasurer requests that you send your application for tickets, together with your check for the number of tickets required. Seats will be assigned in the order of receipt of application.

To give the Committee time to arrange seating lists, it is desirable that requests for tickets should be in no later than Monday, May 12.

No changes can be made in the seating arrangement after May 13.

SCENE IN HOTEL LOBBY.

To Booksellers and Stationers:

E. P. Dutton & Company

have removed their Business to 681 Fifth Avenue, near 53rd Street. All Dealers are cordially invited to call and inspect our New Premises. Our Sample Room is on the third floor, overlooking Fifth Avenue, where our Mr. Le Baron Scribner will be found to welcome all out of town friends and buyers.

The Dutton Cards

are of unusual selling value. They are designed by famous artists, and the literary parts are by men and women of distinction.

Among the artists are Cecil Alden, C. E. Brock, Mary Dow, Mrs. Wheeland, and Miss Marcellus.

Among the writers are Henry van Dyke, Dr. Jowett, E. S. Martin, Mary Low and others.

The Dutton Calendars are of real merit. The designs are by artists of reputation.

The Block Calendars are from the great writers, Shakespeare, Dickens, Tennyson, Longfellow, Bishop Brooks, and others.

Turnovers and Fancy Calendars are produced in a variety to satisfy all tastes, and range in price from ten cents to three dollars.

The highest skill of the best color printers in the world has been brought to the manufacture of Dutton's Cards and Calendars. Those who receive them are apt to inquire where they can be procured, and thus they can be counted upon to attract the very best type of retail custom to the stores where they are featured.

The Dutton Cards and Calendars will be on show at the Calendar Fair in Philadelphia, May 19

SELL ONE AND YOU SELL THEM ALL

Mr. Van Loan has an audience of not less than two-and-a-half million readers who are crazy about his stories, and a possible audience of not less than fifty million "fans."

Isn't this field large enough for you?

From now until the snow flies his baseball books have the talking-point of timeliness. In the winter you can sell them to the "winter leaguers."

His fight book is good all the time.

His stories are not the ordinary two-men-out-in-the-ninth-and-three-men-on-bases-when-the-hero-knocks-a-home-run kind of baseball stories; they deal with the players as men.

Read them yourself and your enthusiasm will be so great that you'll never let a possible customer escape without selling him a VAN LOAN book.

Reference List of New Publications

Recorded in APRIL, 1913

This Reference List enters the books recorded during the month under (1) author, in Clarendon type, anonymous books having Clarendon type for the first word; (2) title in Roman; (3) subject-heading in SMALL CAPS; (4) name of series in Italics.

A colon after initial designates the most usual given name, as: A: Augustus; B: Benjamin; C: Charles; D: David; E: Edward; F: Frederick; G: George; H: Henry; I: Isaac; J: John; L: Louis; N: Nicholas; P: Peter; R: Richard; S: Samuel; T: Thomas; W: William.

For books received sizes are given in CAPS, Q, O, D, etc., books not received sizes are given in Roman numerals, 4°, 8°, 12°, etc. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. Where not specified the binding is cloth.

Those desiring to learn the entire publishing output of the month in any one field should look under one of the following MAIN HEADINGS:

PHILOSOPHY	MEDICINE	LITERATURE
RELIGION AND THEOLOGY	AGRICULTURE	POETRY
SOCIOLOGY	HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS	DRAMA
LAW	BUSINESS	FICTION
EDUCATION	ENGINEERING, TECHNOLOGY	BIOGRAPHY
PHILOLOGY	FINE ARTS	GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
SCIENCE	GAMES, SPORTS, AMUSEMENTS	HISTORY

Besides the titles listed under each of these headings cross reference is made from each to a limited number of cognate headings which collectively give all the new publications of the month in the given subject or group of subjects.

Inquirers looking for books on a specific topic should look under the general subject to which that topic belongs, i.e., GEOLOGY rather than SILURIAN PERIOD; MATHEMATICS rather than CALCULUS; ECONOMICS rather than WAGES. Books regarding specific Religious denominations, countries and persons, however, should still be sought for under their individual names.

Years Ago—Leather Bindings were in the majority. Today in the rush of trade, necessitating periodic changes in vogue and custom, many changes have taken place, and the cheaper, more flashy binding is much in evidence. To keep abreast of the times and yet preserve quality requires patience and effort.

By GRACE L. H. LUTZ

Author of

"MARCIA SCHUYLER"
"PHOEBE DEANE"
"DAWN of the MORNING"

Illustrated in color by Gayle Hoskins, with striking colored jacket.

$1.25 net ; postpaid, $1.37.

Mrs. Lutz's novels are in steady demand, they have sold through many editions. Each year sees an increasing sale for them. They have been recommended by ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, and many other prominent people interested in providing wholesome literature for young people. There are few libraries and Sunday-school lists which do not include some of them. Also endorsed by the Christian Endeavor World.

MRS. GRACE L. H. LUTZ

The new story is a full-sized novel of deep vital interest to everyone, and should be read by young and old.

It is a strong sociological love story, dealing with the clash of social classes in New York and suggesting a remedy for some of the evils.

The romance of Michael and Starr is one of exquisite charm and sentiment.

Order liberally of all four titles. They will sell in season and out, and you can recommend them to any one.
